ESTHER HILBERT'S BODY FOUND

Girl Whose Mysterious Disappearance Caused Widespread Hunt Found in the Woods. Bullet Hole in Head.

CHESTERFIELD, Sept. 22.—The body of pretty Esther A. Hilbert, who disappeared strangely from her home here one week ago last Sunday, was found this afternoon in a clump of maple trees three-quarters of a mile distant from her her mother's residence.

The girl's body was in a crouching attitude, bent forward on the knees with head hanging under one shoulder. In the right hand was still clutched a twenty-two calibre Smith & Wesson revolver, and in the right temple was a bullet hole. Death had evidently been instantaneous.

POLO GROUNDS, New York, Sept. 22.—When the Cubs came on the field this afternoon to tackle the Giants in a double-header it seemed as though fully 50,000 people were on hand to witness the struggle. There were 35,000 spectators crowded into the grounds, 12,000 were perched on Cogan's Bluff, while 3,000 more found room on the elevated railroad tracks to get a peep at the proceedings.

What a fight of diamond warriors it was destined to be. Both teams were struggling to reach the final goal in the National League. The Giants could afford to lose both games and still have something to spare, but McGraw's men were not willing to take the risk, and they went at the Chicago team from the very start in an effort to put the visitors out of the running for good and all.

New York fans believe the Giants will win the pennant unless they drop dead or take such a slump that at this time looks impossible.

A week ago I only claimed an even break for the Pirates in the series just finished and a like record with the Cubs in the four game series that began this afternoon to assure the Giants the pennant, and I can see no reason why I should change my mind now.

The Giants have only nineteen more games to play, and if they win fourteen of them and then, allowing that the Cubs and Pirates win all their remaining games, the Cubs could only get a tie with the Giants at the best.

THE GAME.

FIRST INNING.

Ames missed the plate on the first three balls and then put the next three plumb over the plate and Hayden died, Herzog to Tenney. Ames grabbed Evers's hot shot and chucked to Tenney. Schulte shot a warm single to left. Herzog fooled Chance's high pop. NO RUNS.

Tenney drew a pass, Overall starting off wild. Herzog did the fan stunt and Tenney overslid in going to second and was nipped, Kling to Tinker, the latter making a quick touch on a bad throw. Bresnahan didn't get a good ball in four and walked on it in consequence. Donlin drove a safe hopper over Steinfeldt's head for a single. Chance ran to first with Seymour's vicious stab. NO RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Steinfeldt flied, Devlin to Tenney, on a slice play by Arthur. Devlin was lightning fast in getting Hofman's slow hopper to Tenney in time. Bridwell duplicated Devlin's play in throwing out Tinker at first. NO RUNS.

Devlin was no trouble for Tinker and Chance. Tinker showed fast work when he shot McCormick's alphabet to Chance and, Bridwell's belt was too fast for Steinfeldt and was a single. Ames did the wild in the most approved style. NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

Donlin clung to Kling's long clout after a hard run. Overall got two bases for his lengthy wallop into the crowd in left. Bridwell dug up Hayden's hot lick and threw it to Tenney. Evers waited long enough to draw a free ticket to first. Bridwell made a costly pickle of Schulte's warm skins and Overall scored. Chance was an easy out, Herzog to Tenney, on a quick play. ONE RUN.

Chance played a long hand in routing Tenney, Hayden pulled in Herzog's short but high bidget. Bresnahan shot a pretty single over Evers's dome. Bresnahan was put out stealing on Kling's throw to Tinker. NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

Steinfeldt singled to centre. Devlin whipped Hofman's bid to Bridwell in time to force out Steinfeldt. Tinker singled past Bridwell. Hofman stole third. Kling safe on Ames's muff of Herzog's throw of a ball that bounded over Tenney. Hofman scored and Tinker went to third. Overall flied to Seymour, scoring Tinker. Hayden singled. Kling, by fast sprinting, scored. Hayden was out, Herzog to Tenney. THREE RUNS.

Donlin popped to Tinker. Seymour beat out Tinker's throw. Schulte caught Devlin's line drive. Seymour out steal-ing, Kling to Evers. NO RUNS.

ARCHBISHOP OPENS UNITED IRISH SESSIONS

The Fourth Biennial Convention in Faneuil Hall; Ryan's Eloquent Speech.

"There is to-day no disunion in Ireland. I assert with absolute confidence that Ireland is more united to-day than at any time in her history."

This declaration was made to-day in Faneuil Hall at the opening session of the fourth biennial convention of the United Irish League by its president, Michael J. Ryan of Philadelphia.

In continuing Mr. Ryan said: "To-day as a result of the less than thirty years' agitation of the Land League, the National League, and the United Irish League—the terrible iniquity of Irish landlordism is forever ended; the days of the "evictor," the "battering ram," and the "crowbar brigade" are numbered; more than half of the soil of Ireland has passed into the absolute ownership of the men who till it; in the same time the rents have been reduced more than one-half, and the 750 proprietors have grown to 325,000 farmer owners—140,000 of whom have become owners within the past five years.

Changes in Ten Years.

"Within our day mighty changes have been wrought. Ten years ago the 5,000,000 people in Ireland had no more voice in the control, direction or management of their local affairs, in the building of their roads, in the construction of their sewers, in the paving of streets, in the expenditure of a dollar of public money for public improvements, than have the inhabitants of the planet Mars in directing the government of Massachusetts.

"John E. Redmond, M. P., the great Irish leader in Parliament, was given an ovation when he reached the stage accompanied by Joseph Devlin, M. P., and John Fitzpatrick, president of the Roscommon County Council. All three are delegates to the convention from Ireland.

Archbishop Opens Session.

Archbishop William H. O'Connell opened the convention with prayer. There were addresses by Mayor Hibbard of Boston, Mayor Patrick J. McCarthy of Providence, Edward Dwyer of St. Louis, who acted as chairman; Judge Gannon of Ireland and Captain Edward O'Meagher Condon, the author of "God Save Ireland." Mr. Condon was given a tremendous ovation. He served twelve years in an English prison after his sentence of death by hanging was commuted. He declared that the only way in which Ireland will gain her freedom is by physical force.

SISTERS DEAD IN BED IN DOUBLE TRAGEDY

That a suicide pact was responsible for the death by asphyxia of the aged sisters, Misses Catherine and Emma Cleary, whose bodies were found side by side in bed in their room at No. 32 East Brookline street to-day, is the belief of the officials investigating the tragedy.

One of the gaslocks in the room, which was locked, was turned on, and the sleeping apartment was full of the deadly fluid. Another note, which led to a small stove with which they had cooked their frugal meals, was also pouring the fatal fumes into the room.

Both of the women were despondent over ill health and their impoverished condition. Katherine was sixty-five years of age and Emma was five years her junior. Up to five years ago both had been employed at a local department store as expert sewers. For five years poor physical condition had kept the elder woman from working. Emma had been able to do only a scanty existence for both, but of late she, too, had become sick, and it is said that the sisters feared they would become paupers.

Mrs. Anna Patterson, their landlady, said to-day that they were in arrears several weeks for rent, and this fact is also considered in investigating their death.

The police of the East Dedham street station ascertain that the two sisters had not lived harmoniously within the past few weeks, and the lodgers in the house say they heard them quarreling frequently.

In Destitute Condition.

Miss Nellie R. Walsh, who now runs a lodging house at No. 49 Worcester street and conducted the house at No. 32 East Brookline street, where the tragedy occurred, for twenty years, says the women had been very destitute and discouraged for nine months or a year.

"They had barely enough to live upon," she said, "and I wouldn't be surprised if they took their own lives.

"The only relative that I know of their having since I knew them was a brother, who was killed in a Boston Elevated accident about two years ago. I understand they have others in Boston, but they never spoke of them and I don't know who they were or where they lived.

"Before they came to the house in Brookline street the Misses Cleary lived for about twenty years at the corner of Huron street and Harrison avenue.

"Mrs. Patterson smelled gas a little after 10 o'clock. She called for the police, and Officers Concannon, McCarthy and Sullivan went to the house. They forced open the door and found the room filled with gas and the bodies of the aged sisters, clad only in night robes, lying side by side in death.

Medical Examiner McDonald was at once notified.

BOSSES WAGE BITTER BATTLE AT THE POLLS

Two hours before the close of the primary election in Boston to-day every participant in each of the larger battles had his victory figured out to the last man.

"I have swept the entire city of Boston," said former Speaker Louis A. Frothingham of Boston, fighting for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant-Governor with John D. Long of Andover and Robert Luce of Somerville.

The polls close at 4 o'clock. In the twenty-five wards of Boston there are 205 precincts.

In the Republican end there is but one battle of big significance, the Frothingham-Cole fight, scramble for delegates to the State convention. Here, presumably the governorship in 1910-'14 is at stake. The chiefs "give" Frothingham the city on the ground that it's his home town, if he wins the nomination the Republicans go before the State with two men at the head of their ticket from the Back Bay ward of Boston.

Big Shows Move Fast.

The most severe of the Democratic big fights is that between Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell and State Senator Frank J. Linehan for the Congressional nomination in the Tenth district. In this district are Wards 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20 and 24, besides the town of Milton and the city of Quincy.

In this fight the preliminaries included diverse shrieking and a race for the Vanderbilt Cup. Both sides claim the final.

Quite as bitter is the fight for the Democratic Congress nomination in the Ninth District, spiced by the battle in the background for control of the city organization in the next attempt to get a Mayor in. The contestants are former Congressman Cox and Congressman "Jack" Keliher, who took the district away from him. State Senator George F. Mosshan allows that he, too, is in the race. Mosshan sent word to the newspapers late this afternoon that the result will be: Mosshan, 9,000; Cury, 7,000; Keliher, 4,000.

Back of Keliher is "Jim" Donovan, former superintendent of streets and leader of Ward 9, and with Donovan is "Jim" Doyle of Ward 12, two precincts of which ward are in the Ninth District.

Where Donovan Comes In.

The Keliher-Conroy battle has become Donovan's fight to get the city away from the strong countrywide of Fitzgerald, Lomasney, McNary & Co. The district includes Wards 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 and Precincts 6 and 7 in Ward 12. It has heretofore been Democratic, 16,000 to 6,000.

There are lesser battles without number, one of the noisiest, of course, being the everlasting squabble of the Curleys—Alderman "Jim" and Ex-Senator "Jim"—for supremacy in the long-suffering seventeenth ward. Each of the Curleys claims that his all his own. Alderman "Jim" is for Frank Linehan in the fight against Congressman O'Connell.

There is the contest of Representative William H. Murray of Charlestown to send Conroy or Councilor Edward F. Sennott of South Boston to the discard, the strenuous attempt of "Honest John" Quinn to nose Commodore "Sod" Dixon of the North End out of the State Senate and in Ward 26 former Senator Brosnahan's movement to succeed Senator Abbott. Bromberg and Abbott are Republicans.

Everybody Confident.

The race for the Republican nomination for Congress a district (the Tenth Congressional) is by no means uninteresting. The Republican contestants are former City Clerk J. Mitchell Galvin and H. S. Robinson, both of whom expect an independent in the race as the result of the Linehan-O'Connell fight. O'Connell carried the district two years ago at the polls by 15,970 votes to the 14,621 cast for Edward B. Callender, Republican.

It seemed apparent late in the afternoon that everybody was going to keep right on claiming everything until the official figures were available and the boat pulled out for Salt Creek.

For once, per ardor George H. Hibbard, Mayor, the city employe was absent form the polls. Mayor Hibbard had announced that employes of the city must attend to business to-day, as on all other days, taking only time enough to vote. There was some grumbling. Polks who have been city employes and Polks who hope to be were on hand in numbers.

Linehan Goes "Subbing."

"Not giving out any figures," Frank Linehan said in South Boston, "but I'll carry South Boston over O'Connell." Linehan covered the district in his automobile as if it was the Butler Ames course at Lowell.

Out in Ward 20, Dorchester, Congressman O'Connell's home, O'Connell's supporters declared that he would beat his record of two years ago when he carried the home ward by 887 votes over Judge Brooks.

In Cambridge, the polls opened at noon. Everything quiet. It was said, was getting a big vote in the upper part of the city and Ward 1 in Cambridgeport. The Cole vote was said to be "scattering."

AMERICAN LEAGUE GROUNDS, DETROIT, Sept. 22.—The swelled-headed Tigers were not so swelled-headed when they took the field against the Red Sox in the American League this afternoon. They are beginning to realize that they cannot count their pennant chickens until they are hatched. For the first time in many weeks they are not leading.

The Red Sox were as happy as schoolboys when they came out for practice to-day. The music of that home run clout of Wagner's, which won yesterday's game, was still ringing in their ears. "Anything to beat Detroit" is the slogan of the Boston team. The actions of Cobb and Rossman in Boston and on these grounds have disgusted the visiting players so much that they have turned against the entire Tiger outfit.

STATE HALTS STOCK ISSUE

The railroad commissioners to-day took their first action under a law passed by the Legislature authorizing railroad and street railway companies to fix the price at which their stock shall be sold or issued and refused to approve an issue of 2,500 shares of the stock of the Fitchburg & Leominster Street Railway Company, which the stockholders had voted to issue at par.

In its order dismissing the petition the board calls attention to the fact that on September 17, 1907, it approved an issue of stock in a similar amount, but sold the price under the then-existing law at 4,110 per share. As the company has declined to issue stock at that price, the existing authorization presents a technical objection to the present proceedings.

"PRODUCE THE PROOF" —BRYAN TO ROOSEVELT

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 22.—William J. Bryan, at noon to-day, sent a telegram to President Roosevelt demanding that the President produce the proof upon which he based his assertions in his letter last night, intimating that Governor Haskell was implicated in the Standard oil scandal.

SOUTH END GROUNDS, Sept. 22.—The cellar champs of the National League were the contenders with the Doves in the opening of the last series which was to be squeezed into two games, demanding a double-header to-morrow, and many of the fans preferred to wait till then to get a longer show for their money.

While the Cardinals did not appear to be much of an enemy for the Doves to smother, they were likely to make the games good for the Hubites, and victory was not remote for them considering the way the Doves had drooped before the teams recently visiting here.

The Mound City team had not been seen for so long that it was hard to recognize it, as Manager McCloskey had put some new material at different spots on the field and was giving them a chance to make good.

His left-hand pitchers, Sallee, Karger and Lush, had won a few games and were ready to make trouble for the Doves before the end of the series came

WILLIAM R. HEARST ANSWERS HASKELL'S ODD PROPOSITION

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—William Randolph Hearst last night gave the following statement to the Associated Press:

To the Associated Press:

I address this communication to you as I cannot have the slightest correspondence or controversy with a man of Mr. Haskell's character.

Mr. Haskell's proposition reminds me of the well-known story of the burglar who was caught in the act by the police. When the police horse in upon him they found him in front of a safe which had been blown open, with his tools in his pocket, a dark lantern in one hand and his other hand on the valuables in the safe. The police dragged the burglar to the courtroom and the judge said to the culprit: "Well, what have you to say for yourself?"

The court records of the complaint of ex-Attorney-General of Ohio, Mr. Monnett, the affidavit of the present assistant of the present Attorney-General of Ohio, Mr. Burnett, and the court records of the Oklahoma case in the Prairie Oil & Gas Company accuse Mr. Haskell, and not I.

Mr. Haskell has had many years in which to sue Mr. Monnett if that gentleman committed a libel in making the U. S. Haskell sue one of the men who attempted to bribe him in the Standard Oil cases.

Mr. Haskell's proposition to arbitrate the matter now shows that he has a sense of humor, even if he has not a sense of honor.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

ROOSEVELT ATTACKS FORAKER AND HASKELL

POINTS TO FACT THAT BRYAN STILL RETAINS STANDARD OIL FUND COLLECTOR.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Sept. 22.—President Roosevelt made public the following statement last night:

"In view of Mr. Hearst's disclosures about Senator Foraker, I make public the following letter written by Mr. Taft on July 20, 1907, to a friend in Ohio, prominent in Ohio politics, who wrote him before the meeting of the State Central committee, asking whether he would object to the committee passing a resolution indorsing Mr. Taft for President and Mr. Foraker for Senator, in the interest of harmony.

"A copy of this letter was submitted to me at the time, but although the facts have been sent; I was not intended for publication, but it was understood that if necessary it should be published.

Says Foraker Sought Peace.

"I personally know that the strongest pressure by various party leaders was brought on Mr. Taft at that time to consent to the proposed arrangement, and he was informed by leading men of Ohio and States that if he would consent to this arrangement all opposition on the part of Mr. Foraker and on the part of some of Mr. Foraker's influential friends in the Senate and elsewhere, would cease and that Mr. Taft's nomination for the Presidency would be assured.

"But Mr. Taft declined for one moment to consider any possible advantage to himself where that would be gained at a great principle was at stake.

"His attitude on this question, as well as on countless such questions, convinced me that of all the men in this Union he was the man pre-eminently for the position of uprightness and character, of fearless and aggressive honesty and of fitness for championing the rights of the people as a whole to be President.

"Administration Justified."

"Senator Foraker has been a leader among those members of Congress of both parties who have resolutely opposed the great policies of internal reform for which the Administration has made itself responsible. His attitude has been such on certain other public men, notably (as shown in this same correspondence published by Mr. Hearst) Governor Hughes of New York.

"There is a striking difference in one respect, however, in the present positions of Governor Haskell and Senator Foraker. Governor Haskell stands high in the councils of Mr. Bryan and is the treasurer of his national campaign committee. Senator Foraker represents only the forces which in embittered fashion, fought the nomination of Mr. Taft, and which were definitely deprived of power within the Republican party when Mr. Taft was nominated.

"The publication of this correspondence not merely justifies in striking fashion the action of the administration, but also casts a curious sidelight on the attacks made upon the administration, both in the Foraker campaign in Ohio and in the case of Mr. Bryan and in the course of Mr. Bryan's campaign.

"Must Elect Taft."

"There is but one way to preserve and perpetuate the great reforms, the great advances in righteousness and upright and fair dealing, which have made for the betterment of the affairs of the national government during the last seven years; and that is by electing Mr. Taft.

"To defeat him will bring lasting satisfaction to but one set of men—namely, to those men who, as shown in the correspondence published by Mr. Hearst, were behind Mr. Foraker, the opponent of Mr. Taft, within his own party, and who now are behind Governor Haskell and his associates, the opponents of Mr. Taft, in the opposite party.

Takes Up Brownsville Case.

"The great and sinister encrypted interests, which have shown such hostility to the Administration, and now to Mr. Taft, have grown to oppose the Administration on various matters not connected with those which mark the real point of difference. For instance, the entire agitation over Brownsville was, in large part, not a genuine agitation on behalf of colored soldiers at all, but merely one phase of the anti-Administration effort of certain interests trying corruptions to bring discredit upon the Administration because it was seeking to cut out the evils connected not only with the corrupt use of wealth, but especially with the corrupt alliance between certain business men of large forces and certain politicians of great influence.

Calls Taft "An Antithesis."

"The venomous hostility of these interests and of their special representatives in public life is not surprising. The very foundation of Mr. Taft was merely the natural sequence of their hostility to the measures of the administration for the benefit of the great corporations doing an interstate business and to the effective and unhampered action in consistently prosecuting all offenders, of great wealth, among us it has prosecuted all other offenders.

"Mr. Taft has been nominated for the very reason that he is the antithesis."

Taft's Letter.

"The letter of Mr. Taft is as follows:

"War Department, Washington.

"Pointe au Pic, Canada, July 20, 1907.

"My Dear Mr.——:

"In respect to one inquiry of yours, I wish to express myself with as much emphasis as possible. I think the Presidency would object to a compromise resolution which shall indorse the Administration of himself for the presidency and Senator Foraker for the senatorship.

"In my judgment it would be not only a political blunder, but a crime, if I would be accepted necessarily as a compromise on my behalf, and, therefore, as a compromise, or at least with the implication of a compromise, on the issues of the campaign. I would be less responsible. It would totally misrepresent my position.

Won't Compromise With Foraker.

"I don't care for the presidency if it has to come by compromise with Senator Foraker or any other man on the issue of principle. He has opposed the vital policies of the present Administration, and in his opposition has seized upon and magnified as important what is incidental matter to embarrass the administration, acting in this, for the opportunity to bring me prejudice to accomplish his main purpose.

"If I was confronted with a mere factional difference in the party, not involving a subject which must come up for consideration and action by the next Republican National Convention, I should not be so emphatic in my conclusion.

Question of Principle.

"It is not on my part a question of personal feeling with respect to Senator Foraker. It is really a question of political principle. In respect to this, the Legislature of Ohio expressed what I believe to be the sentiment of the people of Ohio in a resolution asking the Senator to support the rate bill. Senator Foraker declined to follow this resolution.

"When the issue is whether he shall be returned it must be determined if this is to be a representative form of government, not by the question whether he has followed his constituents, but by the question whether he really represents them in the principles that his constituents desire supported and put into practice.

Issue Between Senator and President.

"The issue really is whether the Republicans of Ohio, therefore, as the constituents of either a senator or a presidential candidate, support the main policies maintained by the Administration, or the opposition to those policies?

"Representing the principles of the administration, I cannot stultify myself by consenting to any proposed compromise which necessarily involves the assumption that the Republicans of Ohio regard this fundamental difference of opinion as of no importance and one that can be waived in the interest of party harmony or the settlement of factional differences.

Predicted Roosevelt Support.

"There is not the slightest doubt that the next national convention of the Republican party will sustain in full the vital and main principles maintained by President Roosevelt, and will express no sympathy with the opposition represented by Senator Foraker, Boies Penrose or these principles and because in my judgment the Republican party of this state is also overwhelmingly in favor of them, I cannot avoid the conclusion that the committee who do me the honor to support me and who, I am told, think that I have the appearance of acquiescence in the proposed compromise. Very sincerely yours,

"WILLIAM H. TAFT."

Publishes Letter Unknown to Taft.

"I publish this letter without Mr. Taft's knowledge, because I feel it my duty to the public that his attitude should be known.

"The man who substantially resists temptation, who can be swerved by any consideration of personal interest from fulfilling the course which he holds the conception of duty dictates to him, the man whose whole concern is for the welfare of the people and who best succeeds in his efforts to render useful public service his extraordinary capacity as an administrator, is surely the man of all others to be entrusted with the presidency.

Appeals for Taft's Election.

"Mr. Taft's candidacy is not based upon large and vague promises, part of which would be impossible of achievement and part of which would be absolutely mischievous to the people of the whole country if put into effect. His candidacy is based upon his great record of actual achievement, his great record of service to the public, upon his inflexible adherence to the highest standards of righteousness, and upon his avowed and absolute fearlessness in relentlessly warning against evil wherever it may be found.

"I appeal to all good citizens, to all high-minded, conscientious men who love their country, for the sake of their country, to put such a man at his head.

(Signed) THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

"Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay, Sept. 21, 1908."

FORAKER DOES NOT WANT NAME USED WITH ROOSEVELT'S

CINCINNATI, Sept. 22.—A typewritten copy of President Roosevelt's attack on him was handed to Senator Joseph B. Foraker last night. The Senator sat in the dark grass of the veranda of his East Walnut Hills home swaying lazily in his grandchildren's swing. He crumpled the Roosevelt attack in the hand that grasped the swing rope and said, briefly:

It was suggested to the Senator that the words of the President were "hot shot."

"To-morrow, perhaps," he said; "not to-night. I am not ready to say."

After a moment he said:

"I may not say so fully as Mr. (Roosevelt) as to wish to appear in his company in the same edition of the papers."

Some of the points made by Roosevelt were told to the Senator. It was mentioned that Mr. Roosevelt accepted the letters made public by Mr. Hearst as correct Senator Foraker said:

"What should be done except the word of his side partners?"

Senator Foraker asked several more questions about the statement which he held in his hand, but made no comment on the answers. Finally he said:

"I will make no reply to-night—perhaps not at all. But at all events, not until to-morrow or later."

Mr. Taft said that he remembered writing the letter mentioned by Roosevelt, but beyond that refused to comment on the statement.

BAILEY COMMENTS ON HEARST EXPOSE

GAINSVILLE, Texas, Sept. 22.—When Senator Joseph W. Bailey was asked to-day what comment he desired to make as to what William R. Hearst said regarding him in his Memphis speech Saturday night Senator Bailey dictated the following:

"Assuming that the Shipley letter which Mr. Hearst read is genuine and that I am the 'Senator B' to whom it refers, I am very glad that it has been given to the public, for it completely refutes a charge which my enemies have been making against me in this State for the last two years. They have been asserting that I am an attorney for the Standard Oil Company and insinuating that I have been friendly to it in matters of legislation.

"This letter distinctly shows that I am not their attorney, and it also distinctly shows that my attitude on [illegible] has changed to suit the interest of the Standard Oil Company. The letter which is said to have been written by Mr. Shipley suggests that the night arrange for Mr. Archbold to talk to me. Mr. Hearst says that he would like to talk to me.

"As a matter of fact, Mr. Shipley never made to me the remotest suggestion of a conference with Mr. Archbold, and I never spoke to Mr. Archbold in my life about matters pending in Congress or any other legislative body. Before I would consent to such a conference I would first have had Archbold promise the Congressional Record should print it and not agree with the State Senator's view on any question, and I insist that I conferred with Mr. Archbold at all. That is what is powerless to alter my opinion as Mr. Shipley admits himself to have been would not give much comfort to my enemies."

In order to prevent the purchase of AMERICANS only for the ballots a plan has been arranged by which teachers may obtain votes and at the same time send the SUNDAY AMERICAN to friends.

It has been customary in these competitions for contestants to buy papers at wholesale rates from newsdealers, cut out the coupons and throw the papers away. In this contest you get your votes at better than wholesale rates, and you are also given the privilege of getting papers for future delivery, which also will include ballots.

The Additional Ballots.

Those who wish to avoid the collecting of large numbers of ballots and to take advantage at the same time of the plan for increasing the ratio of votes, can purchase ballots in accordance with the scheduled printed herewith.

Such contestants must send their money to this office, with the names and addresses of the people whom they wish to receive the SUNDAY AMERICAN. This office will turn the ballots over to the newsdealers. This entitles the contestant not only to the votes, but to the newspapers. This secures the SUNDAY AMERICAN for the people for whom the shipment is to be made. The SUNDAY AMERICAN will be left at the addresses given by the regular newsdealer in the neighborhood.

These orders for future delivery will be delivered to any person or persons you may designate. Not less than four consecutive papers will be sent to any one address.

DOG SAVED LIVES IN EAST BOSTON FIRE

Several East Boston families were driven into a panic and forced to flee from their homes in the early morning hours by a fire which at 4 o'clock to-day by a two-alarm fire which broke out in the wooden buildings at Nos. 111 and 113 Liverpool street, near Decatur.

The building was owned and occupied by Harrigan & Son, tile and gravel roofers. Frank F. Harrigan, the proprietor, believes the blaze to have been incendiary. The barking of an Irish terrier in the burning building really caused the alarm being sent in early and probably saved life and property.

The roofing firm's building is seventy-five feet long, and runs back to adjoining tenements in London street, and flanks other tenements in Decatur street.

Dog Gave Alarm.

A citizen on his way home at that early hour heard the dog barking frantically. He investigated, and found the rear of the roofers' building ablaze, and the alarm was rung in at once. District Chief Garbold, who happened on the scene, knowing the dangerous district, there being lumber yards and box factories near at hand and a Congregational and Presbyterian church, as well as the tenements at the rear and side, sent in a second alarm.

Frank Lawless, who lives with his wife and two children at No. 104 London street, hearing the crackling of the flames and the yelling of a dozen, leaped from his bed and saw the flames. He was just darting out to send the alarm when he heard it striking.

Rescued Wife and Babes.

Lawless, who with his family had been burned out of his home, No. 114 Essex street by the Chelsea fire of April 12, rushed back into the tenement crying, "Fire! Fire!" at the top of his voice. He hustled his wife and his six children into the streets, not stopping to dress. Lawless carried Ruby Ruth, aged one year, while nine-year-old Gertrude helped her mother bring out the other children.

In Decatur street windows were flung open by Leavers who sent the alarm, and soon people were pouring into the street in their night clothing from many homes. Among those who fled were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cooney and six children; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Rogers and five children; Deidde Renzo and wife and a Mrs. Gallagher and her three grown daughters.

THE INSIDERS BOOST STOCKS

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Fearing that they might lose control of the stock market should it be allowed to go lower any further, the insiders got busy to-day with supporting orders, with the result that stocks started irregular, with declines and advances evenly distributed throughout the list.

Smelters, Reading and Union Pacific were the most active. Smelters gained 1¼ points, while Reading and Union Pacific rose only fractionally. Amalgamated Copper was heavy early, selling down to 70, a net loss of 1¼ points.

ACTRESS WIFE OF EARL DEAD

LONDON, Sept. 22.—The former wife of Earl Russell is dead. She gained notoriety through her unfortunate matrimonial venture and her appearance on the vaudeville stage.

Mabel Scott, daughter of Sir Claude Scott, Bart., was married to Earl Russell in 1894. Three years later she secured a divorce from him. On December 17, 1903, she married in London a man who she claimed was the Duke of Modena, and who called himself "Prince Modena." She soon discovered that he was a footman named Edward Hall that he was the son of a London coachman.

MANIAC PRISONER KILLS 2.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 22.—Andrew Lightfoot, a mulatto prisoner at the government hospital, while suffering from homicidal mania to-day escaped his guards and killed two persons. He then made his escape into the woods and eluded a posse of thirty men who followed him. The woods are being surrounded by armed guards.

VETERANS TO BE RETIRED.

Two veterans in the service of the Commonwealth and nation will be retired from active service on October 1, when Daniel W. Taft and Charles O. Andrews, both of Somerville, and each of whom has been a watchman at the State House for twenty-five years, will be retired on full pay with the approval of Acting Governor Draper.

SHOT THROUGH WINDOW.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 22.—Last night about 10 o'clock, while sitting in her house surrounded by friends, Mrs. Mary Cross was shot down at the window. The weapon used was a shotgun and the bullets were loaded with buck shot and tore the woman's face. The murderer is unknown.

TEN FAMILIES SAVED AS TENEMENTS BURN

THRILLING RESCUES AND INTENSE PANIC AT EAST CAMBRIDGE NIGHT FIRE.

Ten families, including fully two scores of children, rushed or were dragged from their homes in the four-story tenement and factory building at No. 112 Thorndike street, East Cambridge, at 2 o'clock this morning when fire was discovered raging in the macaroni and spaghetti factory of Nunzio Bicchieri on the first floor.

Firemen made many thrilling rescues of dazed and helpless women and children whom they piloted to safety through the smoke-choked halls of the burning building.

The fire was probably of incendiary origin, for a window was found to have been broken open on the left side of the factory. The police of Cambridge are investigating to-day.

Tenants in Panic.

When the alarm was sounded and dense clouds of smoke rolled through the building, men, women and children clad in nothing but their night clothes rushed shouting to the street.

Soon other houses were also vacated, and men, women and children poured into the street, carrying furniture and belongings and choking the streets.

When the alarm was first rung in the entire building was filled with smoke, and scenes of terror prevailed from their beds.

The flames gained headway rapidly. Many women and children, half fainting because of the smoke, and others through fear, were half carried, half dragged to the street by the firemen.

Destroy Factory.

The flames destroyed practically all of the machinery and stock of the macaroni factory. Bicchieri had machinery and stock valued at $11,000 in his place and the damage is all of $8,000, with but $5,000 insurance.

The frightened Poles, as they ran to the street were soon cared for by hospitable neighbors, when it was found that the firemen were able to cope with the flames, thus insuring their own dwellings from fire and fire. On the second story, just above the burned factory, four families lived. On one of the two stories above three families lived.

The flames ate their way through to the second floor, where they did but little damage. The damage on the third and fourth floors was all done by smoke and water.

NEW CHANCE FOR CHINAMEN CONDEMNED

Special to the Boston American.

SPRINGFIELD, Sept. 22.—Another chance for life has been given the five Chinamen who are condemned to the electric chair for the murder of four of their fellow countrymen in Chinatown, Boston, August 5, 1907, for the Supreme Court today decided to appoint a special commissioner to consider a bill of exceptions filed by the attorneys for the defence asking that the Supreme Court grant a new trial. The hearing on the petition for a special commissioner to review the bill of exceptions was held to-day before the Supreme Court sitting here. Chief Justice Marcus P. Knowlton presided.

These exceptions had been previously disallowed.

Attorney Harvey H. Pratt argued for the defendants for the appointment of a special commissioner, and Acting District Attorney M. J. Dwyer did not oppose the appointment. The Supreme Court will, therefore, name a special commissioner in the near future who will consider the exceptions, and if he decides to allow them the case will then go to the Supreme Court for review.

The Chinamen who are in danger of the death chair are Min Shee, Hom Wong, Fong Gong, Joe Guey and Werry Charles. About a month ago a knife ax Yee Jung was discharged, and Wong Duck, Wong How and Jung Bel Ling granted new trials. They had been convicted and condemned to the chair for the same crime.

THIEVES RAID STORE; CARRY LOOT IN WAGON

Washington Street Establishment Entered for Second Time in Three Months.

The police were notified to-day that the general store of Leo Hirch at 1,661 Washington street, had been entered by thieves for the second time within three months and goods valued at $1,000 taken. When Mr. Hirsch's assistants opened the store to-day they discovered that the store had been stripped of a large amount of boys' and youths' clothing, hats, haberdashery and jewelry.

The thieves forced a skylight in the rear of the store and dropped about ten feet to a counter. The thieves confined their depredations to the boys' and youths' and jewelry departments. There was a safe in the store in which there was about $200, but that had not been tampered with.

From the large amount of goods taken the police believe that it was taken away in a wagon.

The Hirsch store was broken into last July and about $100 worth of clothing stolen.

FACE CHARGE OF MURDER

The six Italians who are under indictment for murdering Peter Needham and assaulting with intent to kill Thomas Turley and Thomas Moss on Atlantic avenue the night of August 16 were arraigned in the Superior Criminal Court to-day before Judge Bell. The men, through an interpreter, pleaded not guilty. They were held without bail on the indictments charging them with murder in the second degree, and in $5,000 bail on the assault charge.

HUNT THREE MEN IN COPELAND MYSTERY

YOUTHS SEEN IN VICINITY OF SLAIN WOMAN'S HOUSE SOUGHT BY POLICE.

MANSFIELD, Sept. 22.—Two clues are being run down today by the authorities here in their effort to unravel the mystery surrounding the murder of Miss Florence Copeland at her home here last Wednesday. Arrests may be made at any time, for State Officer Alfred B. Hodges of Taunton and Deputy Sheriff William Nelson of Mansfield have learned of suspicious circumstances which must be explained. Three men are wanted.

Miss Mary Mullen, a clerk in Orliff's bakery, just across the street from the Copeland residence, has given the officers the most valuable clew to a possible solution of the mystery of Miss Copeland's death. On the afternoon of the tragedy she saw a young man who has a police record acting suspiciously in front of the Copeland house. She noticed it at the time and has given Sheriff Nelson a very accurate description of this man.

He, with a friend, is sought by the police. One of the young men was found guilty of breaking and entering a house in a nearby village. This young man is an outcast from his home. He is known to have been in Mansfield last Wednesday afternoon when Miss Copeland was killed.

His companion was seen on North Main street before the tragedy occurred. He passed the Copeland house several times.

The theory of the police is that some one entered the Copeland home for the purpose of robbery, and, being surprised immediately after entering, struck Miss Copeland down in order to escape. The wound on Miss Copeland's head was two inches long, and a very ragged one. Medical Examiner Holden is convinced that it was caused by a heavy blow with some blunt instrument.

Miss Mullen's Story.

Miss Mullen gave the police the first information about the young men for whom they are searching. To a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter she said to-day:

"On the afternoon of Miss Copeland's death I noticed a young man walking up and down North Main street. He passed the Copeland house several times, and then suddenly dropped out of sight about the time Miss Copeland was killed. He wore a Panama hat, brown short coat and gray trousers.

"That night I saw him again in company with a young man whose people live in a neighboring village. He is about nineteen years old, too. I have told the police the whole story."

Want to Talk With Pedler.

Sheriff Nelson was very much impressed with Miss Mullen's story. Mr. Nelson believes that the man whom Iceman Samuel Eaton saw slouching in the rear of the Copeland house entered the house for the purpose of robbery and that the other young man, his pal, paraded up and down in front to warn him in case anyone was about to enter the place. It is believed they thought that Miss Copeland was not at home, for she was known to live alone and had been shopping earlier in the afternoon.

The police also desire to talk with a pusher of silver polish and spearmint salve who was in Mansfield on the afternoon Miss Copeland was killed. This man scared two different women when he applied for admission to their homes. They are Mrs. Lucius Rice, who lives directly opposite the Copeland home, and Hattie Cavanaugh, who is employed as a servant for Mrs. Elizabeth Noel's of South Main street. It is thought that this man lives in Taunton.

DEEP MYSTERY IN DEATH OF BRIDE OF YEAR

NEW BEDFORD, Sept. 22.—Suicide or murder?

All New Bedford asks the question today, having in mind the discovery in the waters of the Apponegansett River of the body of Mrs. Ida Howard, wife of Private William Crockett Howard of the United States Artillery at Fort Rodman.

The young woman, whom Howard married only a year or two ago in the South, between enlistments, was about to return home to Serierville, Tenn.

At noon on Sunday her body was found floating in the Apponegansett, eight miles out, at Padanaram in the town of Dartmouth. The only mark upon the body was a slight abrasion behind one ear. Everybody said suicide and the body was turned over to Medical Examiner Bullard, who files his report late to-day.

WIFE REFUSES TO BELIEVE HER HUSBAND FALSE

Special to the Boston American.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 22.—Nothing daunted by the fact that her husband is under arrest and that another woman says he promised to wed her and then stole $400 in cash and a $200 diamond ring from her, Mrs. Edward J. Stewart of this city in standing staunchly by Stewart saying she does not believe the charges against him.

Stewart was arrested here yesterday on a charge of being a fugitive from justice on complaint of the Boston police. Mrs. Rose P. Sonin of No. 205 Washington street, Roxbury, told the Boston officers that Stewart had deceived her and stolen from her. Stewart was held in Providence District Court to-day in $1,500 bail for a continued hearing on October 2.

Rose Sonin repeated her story to the local police. She said she met Stewart in Boston, supposed he was a single man, and consented to wed him. On May 8, last, according to her story, she gave Stewart $400 to buy a photographic outfit with which to set up in business. He also had her $200 diamond ring, she says, but he disappeared with the cash and the ring.

Stewart has a home at No. 322 Dexter street, where he has been living for the past month with his wife, whom he married last December. He is his wife's third husband, her two former husbands having met death by drowning.

Mrs. Stewart refused to believe the complaints against her husband, saying he had always been a good husband to her.

Stewart pleaded not guilty in court. He acknowledges knowing Rose Sonin, but says he never asked her to marry him or took er money and ring.

FRIENDS HUNT MISSING YOUTH OF BROOKLINE

Search is being made in the territory between Brookline and Sharon to-day for Horace Baker, a Brookline young man, who has mysteriously disappeared.

Baker left home Sunday noon to walk to Sharon and has not returned home. As he has never been away from home for any length of time without communicating with his people, it is feared that he has encountered violent treatment.

He is twenty-one years old and is the son of Frederick Baker, coachman for Mrs. John White of Clinton road, Brookline.

Yesterday his brother, Alonzo Baker, traced him along the Sharon highway as far as Norwood, learning that Horace was last seen going through Norwood in company with an elderly man cad in a gray suit.

To-day a party of Brookline young men, friends of Horace, started in an automobile to Sharon to continue the search.

CONVICTED, SAYS COMRADE IS INNOCENT

Thomas Fox, an old-time criminal, created a sensation in the Dedham Superior Court to-day when, after being found guilty, with a companion, Percy W. Metiver of Dorchester, of breaking and entering in Franklin, he dramatically admitted that he was guilty of the crime, but declared that Metiver was innocent.

Judge Harris imposed a sentence of not less than three nor more than five years upon Fox, and continued the case of Metiver for investigation, with the intention, if Fox's story is borne out and conditions warrant it, of placing Metiver on probation.

Fox has spent the most of the last eighteen years in jail, and three years ago made a sensational escape fro mthe Cranston Jail, receiving four bullets in a running fight with officers, which he now carries. He declared that he had been trying to lead an upright life and his downfall was due to a glass of beer.

F. M. HOWARTH, NOTED ARTIST, DIES SUDDENLY

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Word was received by the Evening Journal to-day of the death at his home in Germantown, Philadelphia, of F. M. Howarth, the artist who while with this newspaper created the now famous comic characters in pen and ink drawings of "Mr. E. Z. Mark" and "Lulu and Leander."

Mr. Howarth's death was sudden. He had been in good health up to last week, so far as is known. He was accustomed to do his work at his home, sending his drawings to his publishers.

The artist who created "Mr. E. Z. Mark" and "Lulu and Leander" had a style that was all his own. His figures were drawn in distinctly diminutive stature, with a fanciful touch, and were notable for the broad, sure line he used. The figures were distinguished for their bulging eyes and round heads and what may be called a certain dapper quality.

Howarth's work had a certain humor that was quite as individual as his peculiar style. He depended for his effects upon climax to a series to ridiculous episodes in pictures. The readers of this newspaper will easily recall this quality in the "E. Z. Mark" sketches. He made of "Mr. E. Z. Mark" an individual with human characteristics and a type as well.

Mr. Howarth was connected with the Evening Journal and with the comic supplement of the SUNDAY AMERICAN for about seven years. He left "Puck," the political weekly, to come to the Hearst newspapers. On "Puck," Howarth for about ten or twelve years had his drawings regularly on the back page and the readers of the weekly did not think the periodical complete without his work there.

He was about forty-five years of age.

BIG CHELSEA FACTORIES TO BE REBUILT

That the breaking down of three out of Chelsea's four steam fire engines yesterday was "only natural," in view of the strain to which they were subjected in the disaster of Sunday, April 12, was the statement made to the BOSTON AMERICAN today by Chairman W. E. McClintock of the Chelsea Board of Control. The engines were all overhauled after the April fire, but they never got a real test until yesterday.

The Board of Control is satisfied that yesterday's fire was set by a spark from a passing locomotive. The theory is that the spark found its way underneath the 800-foot storage shed of the Atwood & McManus box factory, and that it had a splendid start before it was discovered.

The decision of Atwood & McManus to begin rebuilding "as soo nas the ruins have cooled," has imbued the stricken city with new hope. The concern employs 400 men. They have been notified that all and more will be needed in at least ten weeks. Many will be given the preference in jobs on the work of rebuilding.

Some of the twenty families burned out yesterday had suffered in the same way in the fire of April. All seem to take the second blow philosophically. None had to seek shelter out of doors last night. They were taken in by friends.

Firemen played the hose all night on the still smouldering ruins and were thoroughly tired when Chief Spencer got relief to them at noon to-day. Eight hydrant streams are still directed into the ruins.

"NOT GUILTY" PLEADS CHIEF BUFFINGTON

Ernest Buffington, former chief of the Winthrop police, who was arrested while on his honeymoon at the American House, was arraigned in the East Boston Court to-day on a statutory charge and held for a hearing on October 1.

He pleaded not guilty and asked for the continuance.

When Buffington was taken to the station house a loaded club was found in his pocket and a charge of carrying concealed weapons will also be preferred against him. Bail was set at $3,000, which was furnished by Etta O. Littlefield of Somerville, after the former chief had been detained for two hours.

The arrest of the former chief caused a sensation in Winthrop and terminates a long list of events which have kept him before the public. Only last month he resigned as head of the police force after the Selectmen had conducted a liquor raid over his head, while two years ago he figured in a sensational divorce case against his wife.

Buffington appears this morning in the East Boston Court before Judge Cleary to answer to the charges.

His attorney claims that it looked as if the action against Buffington was inspired by his political enemies.

LIEUT. BELCHER FILES PETITION IN BANKRUPTCY

Former Lieutenant Robert E. Belcher of the signal corps, who was court-martialed a month ago for retaining funds due his subordinates in the militia for services in the Chelsea fire, through his attorney, to-day filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy.

His liabilities are placed at $18,220, distributed among forty-five creditors, and his schedule of assets is placed at $13,225. The largest individual claim is for $900.

MATINEE TROTTER LAME.

Thomas McCusker of Pawtucket, R. I., has sent his splendid matinee trotter Porter Oil Filter to John Olney's place at Lime Rock. The mare recently injured a tendon in a workout.

EMERSON CUTS OFF FOUR MEN

Superintendent of Streets Guy C. Emerson to-day suspended Frank P. Tulley, blacksmith, and Michael Driscoll, electrical engineer, employes in the ferry division. The men are the first in a list of "unnecessary employes" who discharges have been recommended by Deputies Foss, Pratt and Wade of the street department who are investigating the ferry division for Superintendent Emerson. More suspensions of ferry employes will be made next week.

John J. McLaughlin, electrical engineer, and John F. Waters, hose inspector of the paving division, were also suspended by Superintendent Emerson to-day "for department economy."

IRISH ENVOYS VISIT SHUMAN

The Hon. John E. Redmond, M. P.; Mrs. Redmond, Hon. Joseph Devlin and John Fitzgibbon, chairman of the Roscommon County Council, delegates to the United Irish League here, are to-day enjoying themselves visiting Boston's commercial and historic places of interest.

This included a tour of inspection of the great mercantile establishment of A. Shuman & Company at the Shuman corner. The distinguished party was shown over the entire establishment, both manufacturing and retail.

Each member of the party was exceedingly interested in inspecting the details of a great American commercial house. Mr. Fitzgibbon was especially interested, as he is engaged in the clothing business in Ireland. The senior member of the firm, A. Shuman, who knows each of the distinguished Irishmen personally, conducted them through his great establishment.

STATUETTE FOR DUKE OF THE ABRUZZI

ROME, Sept. 22.—The officers of the battleship Regina Elena recently commissioned Sig. Trentacoste, the sculptor, to make a bronze statuette allegorical of the feats in Alaska, the Arctic and in Uganda of the Duke of the Abruzzi, commander of the Regina Elena and fiance of Katherine L. Elkins, daughter of the American millionaire Senator. The presentation had been arranged for to-day, but was postponed, as the statuette is not ready.

NEW PARTY HOLDS BAY STATE CAUCUSES

DELEGATES ELECTED IN MANY MASSACHUSETTS CITIES AND TOWNS.

Primaries are being held to-day in the places in this State which have accepted the joint caucus act, as follows: The cities of Boston, Cambridge, Chelsea, Gloucester, Lawrence, Lowell, Medford, Newton, Quincy, Somerville, Waltham and the town of Groveland.

In these primaries, by virtue of the joint caucus act, the voters of all parties cast their caucus ballots at the same polling place and during the same hours, each voter calling for the ballot of his party. In this State the political parties, under the meaning of the statute, are the Independence League, Republican and Democrat.

Delegates to the Conventions.

At these primaries delegates are elected to the State, county, councillor, congressional and senatorial conventions and to the representative conventions in districts where representative conventions are held. In districts where representative conventions are not held the representative candidates are nominated by direct caucus vote.

In cities and towns which have not accepted the joint-caucus act the primaries are held at different times. The Independence League primaries in these places took place last night.

The Democratic primaries in places not under the joint caucus act take place tomorrow and the Republican to-day. This brings all Republican primaries to-day, both in places under the joint caucus act and otherwise.

Leaving Old Parties.

With a Massachusetts man, Thomas L. Hisgen of West Springfield, as the national standard bearer of the new party, many of those who have become dissatisfied in the two old parties have joined the Independence League. This increase in the party enrollment was plainly manifest in reports from last night's caucuses throughout the State, for practically without an exception the polls of the League members in every city and town last night showed great gains over the figures of previous primaries.

NEW PARTY CAUCUS SURPRISE TO THE OLD PARTIES IN WALPOLE

WALPOLE, Sept. 22.—Politicians of the two old parties were given a surprise last night when they witnessed the enthusiastic caucus of the Independence League at the Town Hall. R. G. Dunham was chosen moderator of the caucus and F. J. Dionne secretary.

After electing delegates to various conventions, the leaguers elected the following Town Committee: R. G. Dunham, chairman; P. J. Dionne, H. F. Noringe, Timothy O'Leary, James Hennessey, Edward Mahoney, Daniel A. Donnelly, Chester A. Fuller, E. S. Boyden and Ernest L. Burbee. This committee is an increase of five over that of last year.

The delegates elected are as follows:

State convention—Patrick H. Tobin.
Congressional, councillor, county and senatorial conventions—R. G. Dunham and P. J. Dionne.

SCORES ATTEND ATHOL CAUCUS OF NEW PARTY

ATHOL, Sept. 22.—The town hall here last night presented the unusual scene it has for many weeks, the occasion being the caucus of the Independence League. Voters of all parties were present in scores and the caucus was declared at its conclusion to have been the best one yet held by the members of the League in this town.

L. G. Hause was elected chairman of the caucus. In selecting delegates to the various conventions, L. G. Hause was chosen to represent the League in the State, congressional and representative conventions. George Ainsworth was elected delegate to the councilor convention; John Oates, delegate at the county convention, and G. Smith delegate to the senatorial convention.

WILL MAKE LEAGUE STRONG FACTOR IN GARDNER POLITICS

GARDNER, Sept. 22.—The caucus of the Independence League was held last night in the town hall and, in addition to electing delegates to the different conventions of the party, plans were discussed for developing the party here and making it a strong factor in town politics.

The delegates elected were:

Enthusiasm prevailed among the Leaguers who attended the caucus.

HYDE PARK CAUCUS NOMINATES FOLEY FOR LEGISLATURE

HYDE PARK, Sept. 22.—The best and largest caucus ever held in this town by the Independence League was that held last night to select delegates to the State and various other conventions of the new party. Scores of voters of the league gathered in Lyric Hall, Everett square, where the ballots were cast, and the caucus was a most harmonious affair from start to finish.

Edward F. Brennan acted as temporary chairman and then the caucus elected E. G. Curran as permanent chairman.

The leaguers nominated W. J. Foley for the House of Representatives, and the following delegates were chosen to attend the State convention of the league: Edward S. Brown, William J. O'Connell, B. J. Curtin and John Brown.

GREAT OUTPOURING AT THE HAVERHILL LEAGUE CAUCUS

HAVERHILL, Sept. 22.—Hundreds of members of the Independence League thronged Unity Hall, this city, last night, when the caucuses of that party were held to elect delegates to the State and various other conventions.

It was the largest ever held by the League in Haverhill, the gathering of voters of this comparatively new political party in Massachusetts indicating the growth it has attained here.

Among the gathering were several well-known Democrats and Republicans, and they viewed the proceedings with alarm. There was no interference, however, and the proceedings were carried on very smoothly.

Rev. Roland D. Sawyer acted as chairman and Jason W. Thoits as secretary.

State—Bertram H. Harrigan, John T. O'Leary, Arthur N. Rolfe and Herbert Greene.
Congressional—Jason W. Thoits, Roland D. Sawyer, Thomas Perkins, George T. Kinsley and Willard B. Pendleton.
Senatorial—Sidney R. Wilson, Bertram H. Harrigan and Jason W. Thoits.
Representative—Roland D. Sawyer, J. Horace Sargent, Sidney R. Wilson and Jason W. Thoits.

LEAGUE STRENGTH IN ORANGE SHOCKS OLD PARTY LEADERS

ORANGE, Sept. 22.—Members of the Independence League held their caucuses in the Town Hall last night. The hall was well filled, although many of them were not enrolled voters in the Independence League. Some were visiting from Athol and Wendell and other nearby places who wanted to get a look at the working of the new party and others were leaders in local politics of the two old parties.

These Democrats and Republicans wanted to size up the new party strength in this town, and some of them were given a decided surprise by its growth among the townspeople during the past months.

The list of delegates elected and the conventions they will serve at are as follows:

GREAT ENTHUSIASM MARKS NEW PARTY RALLY IN SAUGUS

SAUGUS, Sept. 22.—The caucus of the Independence League held here last night was one of the biggest demonstrations of the strength of the new party in this town.

The caucus also brought out the fact that there are two members of the present Saugus Republican town committee who have refused to serve on that body, and they will be immediately compelled by the Independence League, for which they have specified their preference.

Another interesting feature anent the caucus was the announcement that although Elias D. Hunt is a resident of Saugus, and has been for many months, his name is still kept on the list of the Republican City Committee of Lynn, with whom he had formerly been aligned when a resident of Lynn. Mr. Hunt says the committee refuses to take his name off the list.

Christopher Ennis, one of the first voters of the city to become a member of the Independence League and who has been an indefatigable worker in its behalf ever since, was elected unanimously for Representative from this district. It was tribute to Mr. Ennis's untiring work and his popularity in Northampton among the Independence League party men.

'Workers Beggars,' Said Bryan; 'Manufacturers Are Robbers'

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

This is to certify that I, James Campbell, residing No. 608 Mellon street, in the city of Pittsburg, County of Allegheny and State of Pennsylvania, declare the following statements to be true:

I was formerly president of the International Association of Window Glass Workers, embracing the United States, Belgium and France; also president for three years of the Window Glass Workers' Association of the United States, and was chief State Factory Inspector of the State of Pennsylvania for two terms of four years each.

I also declare that in 1893, while the Wilson bill was being considered by Congress, I was in Washington, D. C., with a committee of the Window Glass Workers' Association in the interests of the Window Glass Workers of the United States.

Our committee was present at a hearing accorded to the Window Glass Manufacturers of the United States by the Ways and Means Committee. During the discussion that followed, Mr. William Jennings Bryan, who was a member of the Ways and Means Committee, in talking to Mr. James A. Chambers of the Manufacturers' Committee, referred to the manufacturers as "Robbers." I then said to Mr. Bryan:

"If you consider the manufacturers robbers, what do you think of the workers?"

To which Mr. Bryan replied:

"They are a lot of public beggars."

In reply I said:

"I do not consider it begging to try to maintain the American standard of wages."

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this seventh day of July, 1908. JAMES CAMPBELL.

(Sworn and subscribed before me this 7th day of July, 1908.

Haskell's Resolution Calling Trade Unionism Contemptible

The following is the resolution introduced by C. N. Haskell (now collector of funds for the Bryan campaign) at a secret meeting of a business men's alliance of Muskogee, I. T.:

"Whereas, it is apparent that there is in our city with the labor people a movement which, if it is not checked at once, will invade our rights as citizens and taxpayers to conduct our own business; and,

"Whereas, the price of labor is being constantly advanced to a prohibitive standard by these labor unions, which threatens the growth of our city; and,

"Whereas, the laborers, through their unions and backed by a central trades union, are becoming intolerable; and,

"Whereas, this status of affairs has recently been stimulated by a recent labor convention in our city; therefore, be it

Resolved, that we, the citizens of Muskogee, representing the best interests of our city, do hereby bind ourselves together and pledge ourselves, severally, that we, and each of us, as citizens of Muskogee, WILL DO ALL IN OUR POWER TO DISCRIMINATE AGAINST ANY AND ALL LABOR MEN who may hold a union or trades assembly card, not for the purpose of injuring these men personally, but TO CHECK THIS CONTEMPTIBLE FANATICISM OF TRADE UNIONISM; and, be it further

"Resolved, that we take steps to induce good, sober and industrious mechanics to come to our city, union or non-union, who will pledge themselves not to join the unions or trades assembly of this city, and that we pledge to such men a preference at all times; also that we invite such men to join our alliance.

(Signed) "C. N. HASKELL."

Marie Doro a Bewitching "Tease"; "Warrens of Virginia" Wins Plaudits

A most audacious, irritating, exasperating and altogether lovely little tease—Miss Marie Doro in "The Richest Girl," her brand new play which was given at the Park Theatre last night for the first time on any stage.

She is "Papa's little package of chocolate," her father being the Chocolate King, and she is papa's spoiled and wilful darling, she is, and she drops in wisely unwelcomed into the life of a staid and unimaginative young government clerk who is already engaged to one girl and who is properly appalled at the prospect of offering hospitality to this mischievous miss, when his fiancee and her father are due the next morning for a visit.

But stay the chocolate Princess does, and she teases the young clerk to distraction, makes an utter wreck of his life, plans and prospects, and finally makes him love his fiancee, his job and his youthful wife, till one wonders that he doesn't trounce her. But he gets the trouncing she steps in from. And all because she has fallen in love with him and can't understand why she can't do as she pleases with him, just as she has done with everything else in her mischief-making life.

When the baited clerk will have caught no fish, then she would become a nun and enter a convent. And she comes out in the last act in nun's robe and cap and must be called "Sister Benjamin," more bewitching than ever.

In the end the "little package of chocolate" and the tormented youth dissolve on each other's neck in a torrent of tears, and Benjamine gets the man she wanted after all.

Marie Doro is as sweet as chocolate all through, though anything but soothing to the clerk. Orrin Johnson, as Paul Normand, the clerk, is capital as the obstinate and resentful victim of her wiles.

The comedy, translated from the French and doubtless toned down for American stages, has bright lines and a superabundance of words in spots. But it is bright and lively, and the audience laughed and applauded and gave curtain calls without effort.

"The Warrens" Return.

David Belasco's "The Warrens of Virginia," direct from an extended run at the New York Theatre, opened a two-weeks' engagement at the Majestic last night, and the power of the charming story of civil war days, coupled with a presentation distinctly Belascan, proved an irresistible combination.

The story, which, by the way, is now running serially in the BOSTON AMERICAN, is a wide departure from the stereotyped romance of the early sixties, and under the masterly touch of a powerful cast becomes almost magnetic in its power to hold.

The story hinges on a young "Yankee" lieutenant's choice between his loyalty to the cause and devotion to his sweetheart. Less skilfully done, Lieutenant Burton might easily be converted into the heavy villain, masquerading in the ardent wooer, to accomplish his mission, the overthrow of General Warren, under whose roof he is harbored as a guest.

And there is the knotty problem. As presented by C. D. Waldron, Lieutenant Burton emerges from the ordeal with his halo dimmed and a few deuts in his armor of knighthood.

Frank Keenan's portrayal of General Warren as a Virginia gentleman of the old régime, a strong Confederate leader with a personality that is compelling, and a father who is in his tender renewal of his courtship days of true love, is one of the finest and most polished outbursts upon his discovery of the deception, seems to be reserved for the end.

Charlotte Walker's Agatha Warren is a personification of the strong-natured, self-possessed Virginia girl, and her lines move along like a song. The cast is powerful throughout. William McVay as General Griffith, the dough-face Northerner, is a distinct contrast to Mr. Keenan's type, in voice, manner and delivery, should he be. Mrs. Charles G. Craig's Sapho is the typical Southern mammy of the ilk that drama and song have exaggerated. Emma de Ar her beed in the courtship scenes, though consistent throughout.

The four acts of the Warrens of Virginia are staged in Belasco's finest touches of beauty, and Washington, and the play loses not a whit of the strict fidelity to clothes and manners of the days of the war.

Cohan Travesty at the Hollis.

"The American Idea" continues to be the bill at the Hollis Street Theatre. This new musical travesty from the prolific pen of George M. Cohan has made one of the big hits of recent years. There is nothing on the stage here or abroad which beats it for dash and go. It is remarkable, too, for some very original features. The Mysterious Man and his parts in the piece is a very ingenious and well executed conceit. The ragtime song and dance is about the liveliest thing on the local stage.

Humorists at the Orpheum.

Those humorists, Williams and Walker, are still on the stage at the Orpheum Theatre and are drawing in this, the third week of their engagement, audiences which fax the house. "Bandanna Land" is a very amusing musical piece, and it has songs which admit of no question as to their merit. The way they are being played around town to-day is significant of that. In the local theatregoers see two colored men who are so naturally given to comedy and song on the stage. The company is very strong vocally, and when it comes to ability to dance has few peers. Ada Overton Walker's Salome dance is a very striking inspiration and effort.

"The Old Homestead."

Denman Thompson as Uncle Joshua Whitcomb in "The Old Homestead" began last evening another week at the Boston Theatre. The longer Mr. Thompson plays his remarkable character creation the stronger it becomes in the estimation of the public. From all over New England people are coming to Boston to see this sector in his most noteworthy effort of a long stage career. When he leaves Boston it will be for cities remote from Yankeeland. The support of the star is fine and the play is splendidly mounted on the biggest of stages.

"The Merry Widow."

"The Merry Widow" began its fifth week at the Tremont Theatre last night before an audience so big that it explained why the management announces that seats are selling weeks in advance. Miss Lina Abarbanell returned to the company to take the title role after several days' rest. Late last week Miss Hope Dale, who was the first "Merry Widow" in Boston, came on from New York to temporarily take her old part here. Miss Dale resumed her role at the head of the New York company last night, when Miss Abarbanell reappeared at the Tremont. The latter was in splendid voice after three days' rest.

"Commencement Days."

At the Colonial Theatre last evening John Cort's clever company of players began their last week of the engagement in this house of "Commencement Days," a new college play which has won favor and praise for its charm and novelty. The company has made many friends in this city, and Miss Dale and Catherine Florence will long be remembered pleasantly. All the other college dramas are mostly for boys. But "Commencement Days" is a girl play mostly by girls and is sure to appeal to every one of the sex.

"Resurrection."

Count Tolstoi's great play, "Resurrection," was presented yesterday at the Howdoin Square Theatre by the company which has made so many notable presentations there of standard dramas. Rosian Zaleska in the leading female role was seen for the first time in this house. She made a fine impression in the part of the unhappy heroine. She proved herself a strong emotional actress. The play is of darkest Russia and cold Siberia, and there is a great moral lesson behind it.

Miner's "Merry Burlesquers."

At the Howard, where there is always something doing, Miner's "Merry Burlesquers" opened the week yesterday, with Harry Fox as leading comedian and Ruth Wilson as leading lady. The company gives an all-right show. The burletta called "The Tiger" is a dandy for fun and made everybody in the house roar. There are twenty handsome girls in the company and they were kept busy off as well as on the stage, making ten changes of costume. John Price and Hazel Ash are a couple of laugh producers who figure extensively in the show, and Lydia Fox is one of the swaggerest of swagger soubrettes.

MISS CHARLOTTE WALKER
in "The Warrens of Virginia."

Pat's Gaiety Girls.

Pat White and his Gaiety Girls made things hum at the Columbia Music Hall yesterday. "Doings in Mardville" the opening farce, was surely a screamer. The after piece was "The Night of the Fight," and that was another winner. George T. Davis's illustrated songs proved a real pyrotechnic act by the Malvern troupe was a hit. Annie Grant and Margie Childs appeared in a clever musical skit and Lew Hilton's Whizzers proved themselves to be very musical.

"London Belles."

Rose Sydell's "London Belles" opened the week at the Palace Theatre yesterday afternoon in two laughable travesties entitled "The Affinity Bureau" and "Satan's Honeymoon." The company comprises fifty people and it is a remarkable one for quality as for quantity. Patrons of the house pronounced it one of the best ever seen there and, as they are a critical bunch, that is a pretty high endorsement. Rose Sydell wore some beautiful costumes and was supported by W. S. Campbell, Johnnie Weber, and Kennedy, Evans and Kennedy. The girls in the chorus line were young, graceful and good looking.

Coming Good Ones.

When the bouquets of the Colonial Theatre opened at 8 o'clock this morning the sale of seats opened for the return engagement of "The Red Mill," which will begin there next Monday evening. Montgomery and Stone still lead the cast.

"The Rose Maid" will be back again in Boston a week from Monday, but this time at the Hollis Street Theatre. The cast will be headed by Christie MacDonald.

"The Thief" will be the next attraction at the Park Theatre following the engagement of Marie Doro in "The Richest Girl."

"The last will be heard of Julia Sellew and Margaret Illington.

Fine Moving Pictures.

Lyman Howe Coming.

Lyman H. Howe, with his new moving pictures, will be at Tremont Temple on Friday and Saturday, September 25 and 26. Mr. Howe has exhibited some notable programmes heretofore, but the new one tops them all. The panoramas unrolled during an automobile trip through Savoy (France) are revealed in motion photography. India is also portrayed by moving pictures. The Eastern Gateway—Calcutta—and the Western—Bombay—are both shown true to their cosmopolitan city life.

"A Square Deal" at Globe.

Two former Boston Stock Company favorites are playing parts in the comedy-drama, "A Square Deal," at the Globe, scored tremendous hits last night. They are Otis B. Thayer as Hannibal Hawkins, and Miss Katherine Stinson, as the pretty school teacher, Ruth Leighton.

The play has for its plot a political fight in Kansas between a corrupt political "boss" and an honest farmer lawyer, in love with a pretty school teacher, and ends with the victory of the farmer lawyer in politics and in love.

Castle Square.

Mary Young, whom Boston theatregoers love to call their own, came back last night to the Castle Square Theatre, the scene of her first triumphs in this city, and received one of the most enthusiastic welcomes ever accorded a star here. Her vehicle is "The Devil," now in the third week of a successful run. The tremendous interest that the play has attracted gave way last night while the spectators made the occasion a "Mary Young night." The play is admirably presented. The scenery is gorgeous and the cast of characters could not be better for their respective roles. John Craig is leading man.

"Through Death Valley."

A realistic view of the great West as it was three years ago was presented to the Grand Opera House audience last night in the exciting melodrama, "Through Death Valley." It is woven around a strange sect of the Mormons called the "Danites" or "Destroying Angels." How this band of fanatics simulated piety and devotion into their ranks, welded together with ties binding them to murder and to other desperate methods, the play strongly portrays. The hero has a trying time rescuing his fiancee from the Destroying Angels. Once he is captured and bound to a stake while a rattlesnake is tied to a throng of rawhide just beyond striking distance.

Hayes at Keith's.

John J. Hayes, the famous American runner who won the great Marathon twenty-mile race in England during the recent Olympic games, is one of the great attractions at Keith's this week. He is a splendid specimen of physical manhood. The balance of the bill is exceptionally good.

Hayes, upon the shoulders of four brawny American youths, is borne upon the stage, waving an American flag. Moving pictures introduce this act. The trophy Hayes won is exhibited. The great athlete then tells of the Marathon race, which he won in the finish. His reception was exceedingly cordial.

To-morrow evening is to be Olympic night at Keith's, when all those Bostonians who took part in or saw the Olympic games are to be present to greet John J. Hayes.

Austin & Stone's Museum.

Curio hall and theatre were none too large to accommodate the crowds which surged from Tremont row into Austin & Stone's Museum yesterday to see the biggest show of the season at that famous amusement resort. The Manhattan Girls presented a lively and fascinating performance. Mlle. Zarrigo gave a thrilling exhibition in the $10,000 den of performing bears, one of the most unusual acts ever presented in this country. Somers was seen in an excellent Hebrew role with a troop of trick camarles, and Charles Catulle with his noted electro-peculiar illusion, "Aphrodite."

The Hub Theatre.

At the Hub Theatre the program of vaudeville contains the following: The Ridges, Thurston and Carruthers, the Herrington, comedy novelty gymnasts, and Ben Warren, comedian and eccentric dancer, while the illustrated ballads made a big hit yesterday, if applause is a criterion.

Theatre Premier.

In addition to the motion pictures and illustrated songs which are being given at Theatre Premier, a vaudeville bill is to be provided, the latest of which is Dudley Prescott, in imitations and ventriloquism, with Cohen and Mack, trick and wing dancers; Gertrude Mansa, ballads; Brown and Sheffield, comedians; Harry Rose and Cassie Clifford, singing and dancing.

Theatre Comique.

This week's feature pictures include "The Hart of Cylana," "Life in a Burmese Teak Forest," "Mechanical Legs" and Cal "Sedan Chair." "There Never Was a Girl Like You" and "Dixie and the Girl I Love" are the strongest song hits.

Pastime Theatre.

New motion pictures, new songs and the "Great Ferrari," who defies his escape from a Siberian prison; Billy Cross, Frank Robinson, Jim Haley and Bob Perkins are features appearing at this popular house this week.

SCHOOL COAL GRAFT CHARGES STIR QUINCY

Neponset River Company Accused of Supplying Inferior Brand to the City.

Charges preferred by former employes of Temple A. Winslow, manager of the Neponset River Coal Company, of gross irregularities in supplying some 1,700 tons of coal to the twelve schools of the city, are to be referred to the law department of the city of Quincy, following a stormy hearing before the School Committee of that city last night.

The accusations are: That the company contracted to deliver Lehigh coal at the Adams and Wollaston schools and the coal delivered was a soft coal, mixed Lehigh and two-thirds inferior coal; that soft coal delivered at the high school was mixed with screenings; that the blind legs of the coal wagon horses were allowed to rest on the scales when the coal was weighed; that the foreman of the yard was said to have himself weighed with the coal, and that on one occasion where four fourteen tons were delivered weighing slips for fifteen tons were presented.

Secret Session Refused.

The accusers are: Michael J. Curley, former agent of the Neponset River Coal Company; Stephen J. Sheehan, present agent of the company; Robert E. Whitten, Philip Rossiter and Marshal Creevis, teamsters formerly in the employ of the company. Mr. J. Sheehan of Local No. 68, at whose instance the investigation is being made, also participated in the charges.

Requests of Mr. Sheehan that the inquiry be held closed doors and by Manager Winslow that he be allowed to be represented by counsel were denied by the board.

At this night's session personalities were freely indulged in. Manager Winslow made a statement in which he said: "I am not John J. Fenton of the Coal Teamsters' Union of Boston, who can be bought for a dollar for $100."

"My reputation for good character is far better than yours, you contemptible cur," retorted Fenton.

As a consequence of this parley Fenton declared to-day that he would sue Winslow.

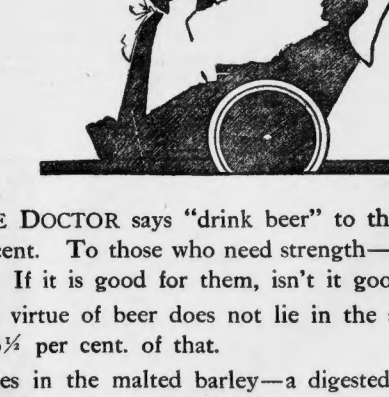
Outgrowth of Labor Disputes.

The charges are the outgrowth of trouble between the Coal Teamsters' Union and Manager Winslow of the Neponset River Coal Company.

The coal company had twenty-two men in its employ. The teamsters claim that they had to work from 7 a. m. until 10 or 12 at night. On Saturday, September 5, the last man was done at 8:45, while union men quibbled at quarters.

As a consequence the shop was organized, and Tuesday, September 8, the day following Labor day, eighteen of the twenty-two were discharged. These men began to tell of alleged practices at the Neponset yard and the charges to the Quincy School Committee followed.

The men claim that a 2,000 pound load of coal weighs 3,700 pounds when the hind legs of the horses are on the scales. They claim that there is a difference of 25 cents a ton between Lehigh and common egg. When screenings are added, they say, an immense difference in value occurs.



THE DOCTOR says "drink beer" to the weak and the convalescent. To those who need strength—need a food and a tonic. If it is good for them, isn't it good for you?

The virtue of beer does not lie in the alcohol. There is only 3½ per cent. of that.

It lies in the malted barley—a digested food. And in the hops—a tonic and an aid to sleep.

It lies, too, in the fact that the drinking of beer flushes the system of waste. So would water, of course, if one drank enough of it. But you don't drink water like beer.

When beer is pure there is nothing more healthful. And Schlitz beer is pure. It brings no after-effects, no biliousness.

But better go without beer than to drink the wrong beer. That is why the Doctor generally says "Drink Schlitz."

Ask for the Brewery Bottling.
Common beer is sometimes substituted for Schlitz.
To avoid being imposed upon, see that the cork or crown is branded Schlitz.

THE PEOPLE WITH WHOM WE LIVE

There Is No Other Place Where the Brutality of Humanity Looms Up as It Does in the Family Circle.

By DOROTHY DIX

THE other day a man, writing in a Philadelphia newspaper of his woes said that he would be perfectly happy if only occasionally he could hear his wife say, in the course of ordinary life, "Thank you," "That is very kind of you," "I beg your pardon," "I see that I am wrong," etc., etc.

In view of the mighty tragedies of existence, the heart wail of this poor man, who only yearns to be treated at home with common civility, is almost grotesquely amusing at first sight; but, when you take a second sqint at it, it is heartbreakingly pathetic.

For he voices the sufferings of the complaining millions who have to live a life that is all rough edges; who have to endure the daily companionship of people who, in their intercourse with each other disdain to smooth anything down by using the salve of politeness and the oil of courtesy.

Brutality in the Family Circle

There is no other place in the world where the brutality of humanity looms up as it does in the family circle. With strangers we control our tempers, we hide our peculiarities, we soften our speech, we restrain our savage impulses; but with our own—with those who are tied to us by blood or marriage and connot get away without open scandal—we give ourselves full liberty to be just as hateful and disagreeable and cantankerous as we can.

Volumes have been written celebrating the beauty of family life. Hundreds of thousands of poems and songs have been penned extolling the dear old home. But the truth is that the old home is like the old oaken bucket—it is more admirable in poetry than it is in reality, and the farther we get from it the more we admire it; while as for family life—its chief virtue is that it is a discipline that prepares us for the life to come.

Searchlight on Every Weakness

Who does not know what it is to suffer from family criticism—that relentless candor that searches out your every weakness and turns a searchlight upon it? Other people do not feel called upon to tell you that your hat is too young for you, and that you needn't try to look thirty-five when you are all of forty, and that your complexion is too sallow to wear pink, and that anybody who is as fat as you are looks like a feather bed in an empire dress. Only members of your family do that.

Who has not suffered from family plain speaking—that awful, pitiless putting of the finger on the sore spot in one's very soul?

Who has not had to stand while the dread that one shivered away from in the silence of the night and brought to light—while somebody told you that your child was mentally deficient, or your husband faithless, or your son was taken home drunk from a party.

An Ever-Prying Curiosity.

Who has not had to suffer from family curiosity—that vulgar prying into your private affairs for which there is no excuse, but that demands to read every letter, to have itemized account of every cent spent, and that salutes every out-going with "Where are you going? Why are you going? What do you expect to do?" and meets one at the threshold with "Why did you go? Where did you go? What did you go for? What did you say?"

Who has not suffered from perpetual family advice—the maddening interference with everything on earth one does, or doesn't do, and that renders it impossible for one even to buy a new toothbrush without being catechised as to why one didn't get a softer one, or a harder one, or a straight handled one or a crooked handled one, or any other kind than the one that one did get?

Now Comes the Story-Teller.

Who has not suffered from the perpetual family story-telling? In every family there is one Ancient Mariner, who fixes you with his glittering eye and tells over the same old stories, until one wonders that suicide is as rare as it is, or that half of the population is not languishing in jail, charged with parricide, or matricide, or fratricide.

Who has not suffered from the family oracle who knows it all, or the family regulator who feels called upon to police everybody else's morals and habits?

Who has not suffered from the family pest who insists on reading aloud, or the double-distilled affliction producer who sits up and tells you over again the things you have already read in the daily paper, or the jokes in the comic paper?

All of us, like St. Paul, have suffered these things in our own person at the hands of our family, and it explains why divorces are so common, and why young people fly the home nest as soon as they are old enough to travel, and that in the happiest families you will find one brother living in Maine and another in Florida, while a third finds California a most salubrious climate.

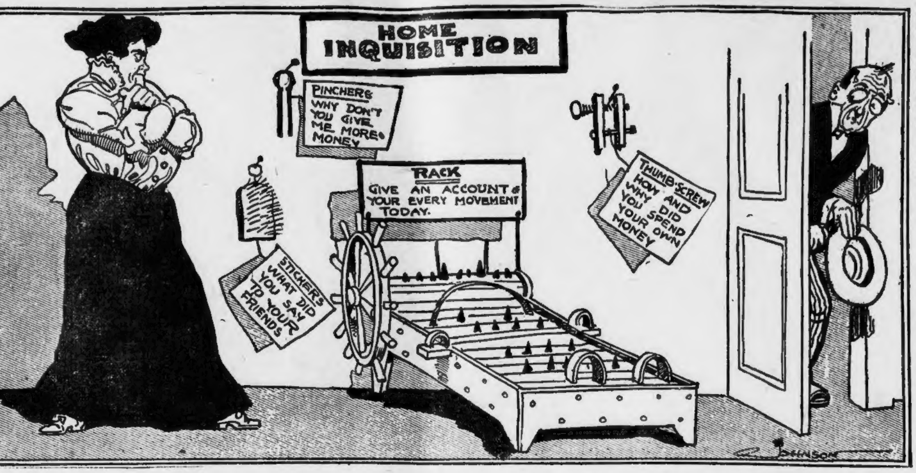
Here Is the Open Sesame

The disintegration of families is the effort to find somebody who will treat us with common civility and respect our individual liberty, and say the words that the Philadelphian yearns to hear from his own wife.

In all good truth the open sesame that philosophers and students have sought in vain a simple man has found, even as the humble Ali Baba swung back the doors to the robbers' cave.

These magic words are: "Thank you," "That is very kind of you," "I beg your pardon," "I see that I am wrong."

DOROTHY DIX.



The family inquisition that demands to read every letter and have every cent accounted for, and has a "why," a "where" and a "what" for every move.

Only a Mother-in-Law

But Stribling for 16 Years Thought Her an Angel.

By KENNETT HARRIS

BEFORE Stribling got married Mrs. Sanaper told him she had no idea of interfering with his domestic affairs.

"I hope I always have realized that young people must find out for themselves what is best for them, and settle their own differences without the help of any third person," she said. "When you marry Bessie I can't help being your mother-in-law, but I'm not going to be the kind of mother-in-law that you read about in the funny papers."

"It isn't necessary for you to tell me that," said Stribling, smiling.

"I'm coming to see you now and then," continued Mrs. Sanaper, "but I'm not going to make you any six months visits."

"I wish that you'd make up your mind to live with us," said Stribling, with perfect sincerity.

"I won't," said Mrs. Sanaper. "I think too much of you both. And another thing is that Bessie needn't come to me with any of her troubles, thinking I'm going to take her part, for I'm not. I think you're a dear, good boy, but I do not think you are an angel, and I know Bessie isn't, so you'll have your troubles."

"I don't think they'll be very serious ones," said Stribling, confidently.

Wanted to Declare Himself

"Well, that's all," said Mrs. Sanaper. "Now you know what you've got to expect. I've declared myself and that's what I wanted to do. Bessie will be down in a few minutes."

Stribling married Bessie about a month after that interview, and he was not long in discovering that Mrs. Sanaper was living up to the letter and spirit of her declaration.

She came to see the young peole, but not half often enough to please Stribling. When she did come her cheerfulness, her warm appreciation of everything done or planned in the little home, her approval of everything they had acquired, made her a household joy.

When the first baby arrived her helpfulness was almost beyond words and Stribling was almost tearful in his gratitude. But even the baby was not able to keep her a day longer than she was absolutely needed.

"No, John," she said when Stribling entreated her, even reproached her. "I don't live so far off that I can't be here the minute I'm wanted, and I'll be over to see the little precious often enough. But I'll never forget what I went through with my own dear mother when Bessie was a baby. Mother was with us all the time, and she wouldn't let me do a single thing that I wanted to do with my own child. No, I'll call you up every day that I don't come, but I've got to go now."

Became Her Warm Champion

If anyone wanted to stir Stribling up, he had only to speak slightingly of mother-in-law, even in general terms.

"It makes me weary to hear a man who pretends to rudimentary sense and decency talking that way," Stribling would say. "I tell you that no man can have a greater blessing than a mother-in-law of the right kind, and they're generally of the right kind, let me tell you. I don't know how I'd ever get along without mine."

"Perhaps yours is an exception," one of the afflicted ones would suggest.

"You bet she's an exception," Stribling would say, carried a little into inconsistency by his enthusiasm. And then he would begin to brag of Mrs. Sanaper.

Perhaps the fact that Mrs. Sanaper actually had sided with him in one or two little domestic difficulties helped on his enthusiasm. Mrs. Stribling on one occasion was disposed to regard her husband's staying out late rather too seriously, and her mother gently defended the man.

"It will probably happen again, my dear," she said, "but the worst thing in the world to do is to make a fuss about it. He's a man, and men don't like to feel that they are not allowed a little liberty. Besides, why shouldn't he have a little change once in a while?

"You give him a cheerful welcome when he does get home, and tell him you hope he enjoyed himself, even if the fact's only too apparent. He won't want to stay half as long the next time as he will if he anticipates tears and reproaches."

Made Son-in-Law's Path Easy

She apologized for other delinquencies of Stribling's from time to time, as when he wasn't nice about a hat, complained of the dinner or brought guests home unexpectedly in the course of the next fifteen or sixteen years.

So everything went along very happily indeed, upon the whole, until one fatal evening Stribling came home and found his mother-in-law in the sitting room with her embroidery.

"Why, hello, mother!" said Stribling, a little surprised. "I thought we had lost you."

"My rheumatism was troubling me so this afternoon that Bessie wouldn't let me go," explained Mrs. Sanaper.

"I'm sorry," said Stribling. "I can sympathize with you, too. I've been bothered with neuralgia all day. Where is Bessie?"

"She went downtown to do a little shopping," replied Mrs. Sanaper. "I thought surely that you would come one on the same train."

Stribling frowned as a sharp pain shot through his temples. "It's a dickens of a time for her to stay," he said, irritably.

Mrs. Sanaper put her hand suddenly to her back and dropped her work. "Drat it!" she exclaimed.

"I should think she'd manage to buy what she wanted and be back in time for dinner," growled Stribling.

Just Her Natural Hostility

"I don't think you ought to be cross about it," said Mrs. Sanaper. "She isn't away when you come home very often, poor girl.

"I suppose you think she ought to be," said Stribling. "She's an abused, trampled-on, domestic drudge, isn't she? And I'm a brute. Is that what you mean?"

Mrs. Sanaper groaned a little and then said with some energy: "I certainly think you are not in a very amiable mood this evening, John."

Stribling turned on his heel and left the room.

That night Mrs. Stribling said: "What have you been saying to mother, John? She's been crying about something, and she won't tell me what it is."

"I'll tell you," said Stribling. "I wish she'd go. She's been here two days now. Because she happens to be my mother-in-law, I don't see why I'm to be criticised by her. She's been trying to make out that I'm mean to you—or she thinks so; that's all. It's the natural hostility of a woman to the man who marries her daughter, I suppose, and I suppose I'll have to put up with it, but I don't like it. Just plain mother-in-law."

The moral is that eternal vigilance is the price of toleration.

You Never Can Tell How It Will Work

"SHE is absolutely perfect, Billy," said Billy's younger sister with enthusiasm. "She's just the kind of girl I should love for a sister, but of course I don't expect you to appreciate her at all. You haven't got a bit of sense about girls. I'm sure I don't know what would become of you if I didn't watch over you a little."

"Is she a blonde or brunette?" asked Billy with lazy interest, for he and his sister had little similarity of tastes when it came to girls.

"She's the dearest little blonde, with the most appealing face and big, baby blue eyes. There's this about her, too: She has a lot of good common sense and makes nearly all her own shirt waists and she sings beautifully, and her father owns a steam yacht——"

"That's plenty about her,' thank you. I've read all about that kind in books. You forget to mention that she is matrimonially inclined and is liable to try to capture a promising person like myself."

"Why, she wouldn't consider you for a moment. If you will only be nice to her while she is visiting me it won't be at all necessary for you to do anything more. Don't neglect her, though, for I want her to like you.

* * * * * * * * *

Next day the little blonde arrived with much fuss and feathers.

"Oh, she'll pass in a crowd," was Billy's verdict a little later when his sister anxiously sought his opinion of her friend.

"Please don't be gruff, Billy. Be nice to her, for she won't be here long."

Billy gave the desired promise with an air of martyrdom. He kept his word beautifully during the next ten days and donned his dress clothes six nights out of the seven without a word of complaint. His sister felt conscience-stricken at times, knowing how wretchedly bored Billy must be.

The little blonde visitor accepted Billy's devotion, together with that of all the other men who crossed her path, as a matter of course. Billy's sister felt a little piqued at such indifference, because if she did say it herself there were few girls who had as good-looking a brother as Billy was.

It was at the ghost party that the visitor really forfeited the good will of Billy's sister. It wasn't just because she committed the unpardonable social error of fainting at the appearance of the sulphur ghost, for Billy's sister really had been solicitous when Billy carried the blonde girl upstairs and hovered around until she opened her eyes just as he was bending over her. It was what the little blonde girl did when she saw Billy there. Two little hands had caught Billy's face between them impetuously and then had quickly dropped when Billy's sister ejaculated, "Oh."

"I don't think Ruth need have upset the whole party the way she did last night," complained Billy's sister to Billy the next day. "She is going home to-morrow and I'll really feel relieved, for she is so hard to entertain."

"Poor little girl!" said Billy meditatively. "When'll she be back from the hair dresser's? She's been gone an hour and forty-five minutes."

"She may stay there all day for all I care," remarked Billy's sister, indifferently. "I suppose you might take her for a little ride in the machine when she comes in, for we ought to be nice to her even though we are so tired of her. We never will have her to visit us again, anyhow."

"You never can tell, though," remarked Billy as he left the room.

"I hope Billy doesn't compromise himself with her," said Billy's sister to her mother a little later, as she waved her hand at the couple departing in the machine.

"Why, you were so fond of her and so anxious that he should fall in love with her," said her mother with a puzzled expression. "I think she is sweet."

"She is a snippy little cat and so weak and washed-out looking," stormed Billy's sister. "She is so impudent and independent and orders Billy around right under my nose. If Billy becomes engaged to her I shall feel it my duty to break off the engagement and open his eyes as I did with Esther."

When the little blonde girl and Billy returned that night his sister was waiting up for them and met them with a worried frown.

"What a naughty girl to say out so late without a caporon!" she said playfully.

The little blonde girl and Billy looked at each other and then laughed.

"Go ahead—tell her," commanded Billy.

The little blonde put up a little hand on which gleamed a new gold band ring.

"We—we're married," she stammered, blushing. Then she threw her arms around her new sister's neck. "Oh, I just never can love you enough! Billy told me how you wanted me for a sister from the very first, and we owe it all to you!"

"I suppose it's for the best," soliloquized Billy's sister later as she mentally reviewed the situation. "Besides, it is nice to have a steam yacht in the family."

Expert Advice on Health and Beauty

BY THE PROFESSOR

HAIR HAS SPLIT ENDS

DEAR PROFESSOR:

My hair is very oily, and I have been greatly troubled, as it just hangs in strings, and I can hardly do it up. Some friend advised me to use talcum powder, and I did use it, and my hair got nice and fluffy, but the ends are all split terribly. I don't know whether it was the powder or not. What would you advise me to do? G. M.

IF the talcum powder relieved the oily condition you can continue the use of it, although the cornmeal and orris root is better to my way of thinking. Put a tablespoonful of the orris root into a cupful of cornmeal, sprinkle it well all over the scalp and then brush it all out again with long, gentle strokes of a good brush. This will take out the oil without drying it so much as the talcum powder does. To remedy the splitting ends go to a hair dresser and have the hair singed. You cannot do this very well yourself, as you art in danger of burning the hair.

SMOKES TOO MUCH

DEAR PROFESSOR:

I am a man twenty-eight years old and I don't drink anything, but I have the cigarette habit. I can quit for two weeks, then I get very nervous and want something to do, so I start smoking. I don't sleep soundly and I think I smoke too much. Do you know of anything that would help me to forget cigarettes? ED. C.

THE only way I know to stop smoking is just to stop. Nobody can do it for you. You know by the signals that it is injuring you and all you have to do is to resolve that you are stronger than any habit that ever poked its nose above ground. When you have decided that, you have stopped it and nothing can make you begin it again. It needs strength of will, that is all, and if you have that you need never suffer from such a cause. Don't think of depending on outside help. Do it by yourself. Get so busy at something worth while that you won't have time to think about smoking. Some say that chewing gum helps.

PIMPLES ON FACE

DEAR PROFESSOR:

My face always has some kind of pimples on it, and there is pus in them. I think they were formerly blackheads, and now another kind of a pimple the size of pinheads breaks out on my face, and when I pierce them there is water in them. I am very careful what I eat, although I work in an office which is very dusty. C. D.

IF you do not succeed in cleansing your tract with the simple home remedies which you have found to be efficacious at other times, go to a physician for advice, for you will have pimples just as long as your blood is trying to eliminate whatever has been absorbed by it that is disturbing it. Open up the pimples and treat them generously with peroxide, dabbing them time and again, being careful not to disturb them while they are healing. Bathe frequently and watch your diet.

His Name Was Tricksy

Recording the Rise and Fall of a Pet Pup

MRS. MULLINS answered the ring at the door of her suburban home and immediately broke into exclamations of joy.

"Why, Mrs. Brock! Why, you dear thing!" punctuating her greeting with kisses. "Come right in. And Irving, too. What a great boy he is getting to be! George, here is Mrs. Brock!"

Mullins's greeting lacked only the kisses to be equal in effusiveness to that of his wife.

"And Irving. Hello, Irving! What have you in your arm? A woodchuck? Pooh! That's not a dog! Is, hey? Aunt gave him to you as a reward for good attendance at school? Don't let your aunt impose on you, my boy. She gave you that pup because she wanted to get even with you."

"That's what I say," sighed Mrs. Brock. "Of all the things to give our boy, and we living in that little flat! I'm sure I've lost pounds in weight since that dog came. He cries in the night something awful, and the lady upstairs says she'll scald him if he comes near her. Irving! I will not hold that dog. You would bring him, now you must take care of him.

"Such a time we have had finding you. Nobody seemed to know you at all.

"Irving, where are you going? Well, don't let the dog get lost.

"The conductor took us eight blocks past the street I told him to stop at, and we have walked and walked.

The Cat and the Pup

"Mercy! What's that awful noise? Irving! Oh, I do believe the cat and the dog are fighting!"

"No," said Mullins, cheerfully; "the cat is fighting, but the dog is trying to retreat. Here, Adalina. Scat, you old vixen! I wonder where that cat learned to spar in that professional style? I never saw a dog get hit in so many places at once in my life. Never mind, Irving. Don't cry. The pup has some hair left and the rest will be replaced gradually as he grows up."

"Well, of all things!" gasped Mrs. Brock, applying a hand to her patent leather belt. "The poor little doggy! I told Irving not to bring him. Irving, take this dog. Here, Tricksy, go to Irving. I'm not going to take care of him. I told you when we started that I wouldn't be responsible for him. But you would bring him, and now you must take care of him."

"Don't you let him hurt my kitty," warned Mrs. Mullins.

"No, Irving," said Mullins, "I wouldn't try to form a happy family combination with that material, if I were you. Tricksy doesn't seem to be a heavyweight, and if Adalina gets in another good uppercut at your pet there won't be anything left of him."

"Now," said Mrs. Mullins, "let's sit down here in the breese and have a cosey chat. "Mother is pretty well, considering," said Mrs. Brock, "but she has a terrible time with that dog. Tricksy is such a mischief. I simply won't keep him much longer. Anyway, the janitor says we'll have to move if we don't get rid of him. It's against the rules of the lease, you know. And the janitor says the landlord made a concession in allowing us to bring Irving back to the flat."

The Pup and the Chickens

The Mullinses' maid appeared in the door and smiled in an apologetic manner. "Excuse me," she said, "but the little boy took the dog to the yard and is sending it after the chickens."

Mrs. Brock sprang to the back door. "Irving! Irving! Come in this minute. Bring the dog. Do you hear? Now, young man, what do you mean by such conduct? Sit in that chair. No, I will not hold the dog. I told you not to bring him, but you insisted, so now you shall take care of him yourself. Are you sorry you have been a naughty boy and disturbed Mr. Mullins's chickens?"

"Nome," said Irving.

"Irving," in a deadly calm voice, "you just wait until we get home."

"Is your sister in the city now?" asked Mrs. Mullins.

"No; she and her husband are in the East. Irving, tell Mrs. Mullins you are sorry you allowed Tricksy to chase the chickens."

"Oh, that's all right," said Mullins. "Is your sister's husband with the same firm he was with last Winter?"

The Passing of the Pup

"Yes. But it isn't all right. Irving must apologize. Are you going to tell Mr. Mullins you are sorry?"

The boy slid down from the chair and came forward sheepishly.

"Mr. Mullins, please excuse me for letting Tricksy——"

"I'll forgive you with all my heart, my boy, if you'll only drop the subject. Your brother-in-law——"

"Why!" exclaimed Mrs. Brock, jumping up, "it's half-past 4, and I told mamma we'd be back to tea. Yes, really, we must go. Irving, get Tricksy and come along. We must get back to grandma's in time for tea."

"Tricksy isn't ready to go," said Irving. "He's gone to play on the front lawn with the neighbor's little boy."

When they reached the front lawn a small, flaxen-haired girl came forward in response to their inquiries for the dog.

"Mrs. Mullins," she said, "a man came along and said the dog was his. He took him away, the man did."

Mrs. Brock turned to her son. "Irving," she said, as if it were an entirely new thought, "I told you not to bring that dog, but you would bring him. Now he's lost. I hope you are satisfied." She paused a minute, then added, "I'm sure I am."

Don't Run After the Men

The Girl Who Is a Man-Chaser Defeats Her Own Ends

By BEATRICE FAINFAX

IT was a rainy day and the great hall of the hotel was filled with people reading, writing, playing bridge and chatting.

A pretty girl sat next me busily engaged in knitting a sweater.

Presently a young man came along waving a telegram and letter in his hand. "Hurrah!" he cried. "Word has come from her at last, and I'm off the first thing in the morning."

"But surely you won't go?" said the girl.

"Why not?" in a surprised tone.

"Why, you wrote her the other day that you would not be there for Sunday—that you had an engagement."

"I know I did," with a boyish laugh, "but, you see, I was not sure she wanted me then. Now I know she does."

"Well," said the girl, "I'm sure she will think it a very queer thing if you change your mind so suddenly. Stay here with us until Monday. You won't have to go just because she has written."

"But, you see, I want to go most awfully. The only difficulty is that I don't exactly see how I am going to manage it."

A Girl Lacking in Pride

"Oh, stay here! We'll have lots of tennis and bridge and no end of fun."

"No matter what happens, I shall not stay here," said the boy, quite decidedly.

I felt like taking the girl by the shoulders and saying, "My dear, don't you see that he does not want to stay? Why will you run after him so?"

Finally the boy went to luncheon and I thought the argument settled. But not a bit of it. A few hours later when we were gathered around the fire, having afternoon tea, the girl once more took up the subject and begged the boy to change his mind and stay.

She made no attempt to lower her voice, and any one who cared to might listen to the discussion.

I grew so disgusted with her lack of pride that I went upstairs, so did not hear the finish.

Next morning, however, the boy drove off in the bus, so I derived my own conclusions.

There is no sight more painful than that of a girl so far forgetting her pride and dignity as to run after a man.

She may fondly imagine that no one sees through her manoeuvring, but she is much mistaken. The man sees through it; everybody sees through it; and nine times out of ten it is a fruitless chase.

Any man with an ounce of spunk likes to do his own courting. He likes to seek, not to be sought, and the moment a girl makes herself too easy the chase loses its zest.

You may not be the type of girl to attract men, but, believe me, running after them will not help matters.

If you cannot win their love, at least you can command their respect. If you run after them you will win neither.

You have your woman's privilege and right to try and make yourself attractive in the eyes of men. Use that in any modest, well-bred way.

Make yourself pretty; be gentle and bright as you can, but do not lower yourself in the eyes of everybody by being a man-chaser.

Dress for the Athletic Girl

THE girl who plays tennis, squash and golf, handles rod and reel, goes out with the guns, loves yachting or sails a small boat, rides and drives does not consider it necessary nowadays to have a striking and individual costume for each separate sport.

Appropriateness, which means comfort, durability and convenience, is the essential feature of sporting attire.

The moment a woman dons for any outdoor exercise or amusement a costume inappropriate for the exercise, time and place, that moment she is badly dressed, no matter how becoming or beautiful her costume may be.

For general out-of-door use a stout suit of serge, cheviot or other woolen is the best all-around costume, varied, of course, by pretty blouses, sweaters, etc.

A dark blue serge or cheviot, very plainly made and without eccentric features, is always an excellent all-around outing frock, and there are innumerable pretty weaves in these one-tone materials among the new stuffs; but it must be remembered that plain dark blue, while generally becoming, and consorting amicably with all other colorings, does show dust and spots in a lamentable fashion.

Leather coats have gained in favor, not only for motor use, but for general rough outing wear as well.

The leather coat should be of severe cut and finish, with ample roominess and several pockets, but it may be luxuriously lined with silk or fur, if one prefers it so. Short coats, long coats and Norfolk jackets are all made up in leather, and for motoring purposes a cap and robe of the same leather are often furnished by the Parisian designers.

THE WARRENS of VIRGINIA

A novel from the romantic Belasco production of the play by WILLIAM C. DE MILLE

Synopsis

General Buck Warren of Virginia, Confederate, and General Jim Griffin of the Union army, are in command of opposing forces that front each other near Appomattox. Warren's force being the defenses of Lee's army. Warren and Griffin are old friends, as are Arthur Warren, the General's son, and Ned Burton, Griffin's nephew, who are fellow lieutenants in the opposing armies.

Arthur Griffin and Ned Burton discuss plans for lieutenant-ship, which will be won by the one or the other of the starring officers as soon as either Warren, under a flag of truce, appears and asks to pass through the Union lines for his father, dying in the.

The pass is granted. Soon after young Warren's daughter Ned Burton falls in appreciative woman, who proves to be General Warren's daughter, the sweetheart of Burton's West Point chum.

Agatha wants to take a basket of food to the Confederate lines, but Burton refuses her a pass. When her brother comes, on cheerful errand, on condemning her failure to do so, the men become people half famished and turns on Burton in a rage.

CHAPTER II.

"Don't Come Near Me or My Home."

THE curt "Miss Warren," with which the pretty Southern girl had replied to his cry of "Agatha!" brought Lieutenant Ned Burton back to earth.

"One moment, please. I am very sorry, but I cannot let that basket through the lines."

"You can't? Not even when you know me?" said the girl softly.

"Why, the Confederate lines are more than half a mile away, anyway," said Burton, "and that's an awful big basket."

"The lines are half a mile away—" said the girl. "That's just what we are looking for."

"Yes," smiled Burton, "that's just what I imagined."

"Dear me," said Miss Warren, "you are abrupt. Why—why, I never heard of such a thing. It's positively funny. All the men I've met back in their own country. Pardon me, Lieutenant Burton, but you haven't improved your manners. Why, it can't be positive you going to take the basket right back our little picnic. Of course—of course, you couldn't do it. I'm sure you'll let us through—please?"

"I am afraid," said Burton, "that unless you decide to—"

"You don't seem to remember the time when you were a guest at our house," she said, haughtily. "Excuse me for mentioning it. Ev years ago you were with us, and when you left every member of the Warren family said, 'come again to me.' This was how we all parted from you."

"Oh, yes, I recollect it. How could I ever forget it! But, Miss Agatha—Miss Warren—you see how times have changed."

"Times have changed, just as easily as kiss my hand," she coaxed. "Surely, you couldn't detain a friend of yours—an old friend—Mr. Ned, I called you once."

Burton, now, Miss Warren," said the young man with more severity. "You see how those supplies—I hate to refuse you, but—"

A Girl's Plea

"You couldn't," said the girl, indignantly. "You are not capable of it. You're not a man, as I remember you, to be uncivilizous to a lady woman. All the Warrens agreed on that, though we did notice that yo' deportment was—was—not learned in Virginia.

"If course, that was only your misfortune. We all can't be born heah. There, there; I'm out of place here. We can take our little basket and run along. No, no; we'se you wouldn't interfere with a lady on a little picnic."

"We really can't grant favors of this sort to—to anybody," he said. "If we did, we should have the battlefields full of women feeding the men and—and running over them."

"That's as it should be," maintained Miss Agatha. "I'm sure it would make battlefields a heap pleasanter."

"Of course it would," smiled Burton, "That's just the trouble. Our business is to make them unpleasant."

"Well," said the girl slowly, "you certainly know your business. I reckon, Sapho, we all might as well turn back and give up the tiresome picnic."

She ignored the hand Ned extended to aid her up the rock and back upon the woodland path.

"I can't see what difference a small basket of food—just a couple of little sandwiches—would make to your very large army. Oh, well!"

may I call this evening if I can get leave?"

"Why, I'd be disgraced forever if any of our girl friends found I was receiving calls from a Yank—er—and—and the old story is changed a heap, you know."

"The rose garden is still there, isn't it?" "Oh, yes. We all couldn't cut the roses. The roses are considerably shot away and the rabbits mostly eaten."

"I suppose," said Burton, and his voice was amazing tender for his stalwart frame, "I suppose you never think of what I said to you three fo' years ago?"

"I don't reckon a girl can quite forget her first—ah, well, Lieutenant Burton, now that you'se seen me you won't think of calling, of course. Very sorry to miss you, but I have been glad to welcome you with true Virginia hospitality. Start off todie, Sapho! Good-by."

"Then I'm not to call?" pleaded Burton. "Dearest of a flag of truce, came the call from the other side of the woodland. Agatha and Burton looked around. At sight of the courier Agatha cried out:

"Arthur! Arthur, darling! O Buddie!" and rushed to his arms. "Oh, what you big boy you've grown through," she said to him. "You are so thin, and all your buttons gone; and your hair is changed a heap—is it not, Sapho! Bring Mr. Arthur some sandwiches."

"Yes, indeedy; yes, indeedy," said Sapho and as she handed him the food she said: "See heah, Marse Arthur, I reckon yo' better come right home outer this place, boy."

The youth smiled.

"Ned," he said, addressing himself to Burton, "I've got a pass from General Griffin to take my father home through your lines."

"Oh, Buddie! Dad's not—he's not—" said Agatha, with whitening cheeks.

"He's not him," young Warren hastened to assure his sister. "He's just worn out, and General Lee has ordered him home at once. He'll be better—that's all, really."

Obeying a sign from Lieutenant Burton the soldiers placed the litter on the ground. The sunlight through the trees made a ghastly show of the gaunt, high cheekboned, wasted face of the grizzled campaigner.

Agatha, with hurried feet, went to the litter, knelt beside it and for a little while let her soft golden hair flooded upon the ashen and tattered breast of her father's gray coat. Her sobs were uncontrollably.

"Sister," said Arthur, "I was going on to prepare mother. But you'd better go instead, and I'll go back where I belong."

"Yes, yes," said the girl arising. Then she turned on Burton. There was fury in her eyes.

"When I see my father, and our boys, and Artie—look at him—eat a sandwich like that—like a famished animal—I tell you this, sah! I think you look too healthy to call at our house."

"It's well enough to fight them with the bayonet, but to starve them to death—it's terrible. Don't come near me or my home now. The bitterness has come straight into my heart. Blood's thicker than water. Don't come near me or my home."

And she fled into the forest, passing on to the humbled Warren mansion to prepare its mistress for the homecoming of the wasted, spent commander.

"Why Did You Write Another?"

"My dear Miss Agatha," replied Burton bitterly, "somewhere in this great country there are about twenty letters belonging to you."

"Lawz! What could you have said in twenty letters?"

"Why, I asked you just twenty times to reconsider your refusal of me. May I—

A Confession.

"Yes, I will confess," said Agatha, "I'm a heap sorry I wrote you that letter. I'll see what I can do."

"Then you do, do you doubt my word?"

"Oh—oh—" murmured the embarrassed officer.

On Sapho's Sacred Honor

"I gibs you mah sacred wo'd oh honah," said the fat Sapho, magnificently, "dat dere ain't nuffin' else in dat basket 'ceptin' what you'se done tole yo' so."

"Is that true, Miss Agatha?"

"Why, Ned," the girl was crossing her face as she made the admission, "it isn't—it isn't."

"Law, honey!" cried the indignant Sapho.

"There, take it," said the girl. "It's the melted-down remains of the old cake of our girl friends bound I was receiving calls from a Yank—er—and—and the old story is changed a heap, you know."

"The rose garden is still there, isn't it?" "Oh, yes. We all couldn't cut the roses. The roses are considerably shot away and the rabbits mostly eaten."

"I suppose," said Burton, and his voice was amazing tender for his stalwart frame, "I suppose you never think of what I said to you three fo' years ago?"

"I don't reckon a girl can quite forget her first—ah, well, Lieutenant Burton, now that you'se seen me you won't think of calling, of course. Very sorry to miss you, but I have been glad to welcome you with true Virginia hospitality. Start off todie, Sapho! Good-by."

"Then I'm not to call?" pleaded Burton. "Dearest of a flag of truce, came the call from the other side of the woodland. Agatha and Burton looked around. At sight of the courier Agatha cried out:

"Arthur! Arthur, darling! O Buddie!" and rushed to his arms. "Oh, what you big boy you've grown through," she said to him. "You are so thin, and all your buttons gone; and your hair is changed a heap—is it not, Sapho! Bring Mr. Arthur some sandwiches."

"Yes, indeedy; yes, indeedy," said Sapho and as she handed him the food she said: "See heah, Marse Arthur, I reckon yo' better come right home outer this place, boy."

The youth smiled.

"Ned," he said, addressing himself to Burton, "I've got a pass from General Griffin to take my father home through your lines."

"Oh, Buddie! Dad's not—he's not—" said Agatha, with whitening cheeks.

"He's not him," young Warren hastened to assure his sister. "He's just worn out, and General Lee has ordered him home at once. He'll be better—that's all, really."

Obeying a sign from Lieutenant Burton the soldiers placed the litter on the ground. The sunlight through the trees made a ghastly show of the gaunt, high cheekboned, wasted face of the grizzled campaigner.

Agatha, with hurried feet, went to the litter, knelt beside it and for a little while let her soft golden hair flooded upon the ashen and tattered breast of her father's gray coat. Her sobs were uncontrollably.

"Sister," said Arthur, "I was going on to prepare mother. But you'd better go instead, and I'll go back where I belong."

"Yes, yes," said the girl arising. Then she turned on Burton. There was fury in her eyes.

"When I see my father, and our boys, and Artie—look at him—eat a sandwich like that—like a famished animal—I tell you this, sah! I think you look too healthy to call at our house."

"It's well enough to fight them with the bayonet, but to starve them to death—it's terrible. Don't come near me or my home now. The bitterness has come straight into my heart. Blood's thicker than water. Don't come near me or my home."

And she fled into the forest, passing on to the humbled Warren mansion to prepare its mistress for the homecoming of the wasted, spent commander.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Caught!

MRS. BHINGO opened the door for Lucian Falconer at ten minutes to eleven.

"Better, bless her soul. As well as ever she was. Slept like a top, she did."

"Is she up?"

"Yes; she's talking with two gentlemen that look like undertakers."

"Undertakers!"

"Well, I dunno what they are, but there's a hearse standing at the door, and all the same."

Lucian. There was a swift handclasp, and then Margaret indicated Mr. Jones, a grizzled and inspector Blackwell came in.

"Mr. Catheart wishes to know who gave him away," said Lucian.

"Oh, jolly pioneer ground," said the private detective viciously. "It took me some time to place you, Alf, but once I had you spotted it didn't take Blackwell long to fit up your case."

"You're wanted in London, my son," put in Blackwell. "Chief Constable of the Consolidated Petroleum bonds needs some clearing up, and they think you can throw a good deal of light on it. I've got a cab at the corner."

"Now, that's considerate of you," laughed Catheart. "Well, well, I suppose I've got to accept your kind invitation. I'll be sorry to cross the Atlantic again."

He turned to Margaret.

"Miss Armour," he said, "you're not going to ask you to forgive me; for after all, I've done nothing to your prejudice. But I beg your pardon gravely for the worry I've caused you. If you could understand all I'd tell you what a soft mark I thought I had. I knew your father's affairs pretty well, and at the time when your uncle Lancelot cut off to South America I was deep in the family's business. When I heard of your father's end, well, I—"

"There is no need for you to trouble Miss Armour with all that," said Lucian. "She knows it already. Inspector Blackwell told her everything this morning."

"Eh?"

"Yes, yes, the New York Detective Bureau has smartened up, Catheart. Besides, Perry wasn't quite clear about how he was coming on; so he started by coaxing you to us—it's cash on the nail there, for information, information," said Blackwell. "Come on now."

Catheart went.

He stopped as he passed Magruder.

"I'd like to give you one between the eyes, Jimboy, for old times' sake; but I'll keep it till I come back again, and then I'll be in a professional interest."

When the detectives and their prisoner were gone, and Mrs. Bhingo, bowalling vouchy the evilness of the times, had been banished to the culinary regions, Lucian, after many moments of hesitation, and with many pauses for the choice of words, recounted the story of the previous night.

How Mrs. Armour rose up and declared her intention to go to her father, to tell him once more how he'd kiss him farewell. He had confessed, and she forgave him, and had procured sentence upon himself; she believed he would carry out the sentence she had fixed for him.

INDEPENDENTS OF WARD 22 HEAR ISSUES

Politicians are evincing special interest in the first anniversary of the Ward 22 Independent Club, to be held in Tuxedo Hall, No. 91 Boylston street, Jamaica Plain, to-morrow night. Prominent speakers have been invited to attend and declare the principles of the platforms adopted by their respective parties.

The club is composed of voters who are opposed to machine dictation and the selective lesson should be freely debated and candidates for nominations examined positive t othely ideas on important questions. The Independence League recently was accepted the invitation to send representatives to the meeting, and Washington A. Cohen, Joseph Sweeney and Republican for the Senate in the Dorchester district; Emil J. Blackmer and Alexander Cohen, candidates for the House in Ward 22, and Cornelius J. Desmond of Ward 24 will be the League speakers.

Mr. Desmond made a strong run for Alderman last year, and will be in the field again this year on his record as a progressive citizen.

TUFTS TO HAVE NEW SCHOOL OF COMMERCE

Tufts College is soon to have one of the greatest and most completely equipped schools of commerce and finance in this country. To-day preliminary plans are to be made to that end, the bequest of Millionaire J. Eliot of $500,000 for that purpose announced last night by President Frederick W. Hamilton on the occasion of Tufts College's furnishing the necessary endowment.

"In a way Mr. Braker's bequest came as a surprise to us," said President Hamilton to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day. "We knew that he intended to give Tufts a large sum of money, but his death was unexpected as he was but a middle-aged man.

"No definite plans for the School of Commerce have been made. Of course the faculty and trustees will so consider what shall be done."

ELKS PRESENT CANNON CHARM

Hugh Cannon, a prominent Charlestown Elk, is wearing a new Elks charm on the end of his watch-chain, the gift of a party of brother Elks who were entertained by Mr. Cannon at his Summer home in Bayside, Nantasket.

The meeting was devoted to a baseball game. At 2 o'clock dinner was served and James Clark presented Mr. Cannon with the charm.

John J. Conway of Charlestown was toastmaster. Songs were sung by Mark Haley, Miss Mary Cannon, Mrs. Hugh Cannon, John Sullivan, Christopher Conway and Edward P. Clark. Miss Josephine Moran played a piano solo and Michael McGuinness spoke on his travels through Europe. Remarks were also contributed by Peter Horan, P. C. Lally, Mr. Welsh, George Fish and Patrick Tracy.

MAYO MEN HEAR LIFE OF DAVITT

At a meeting of the Mayo Men's Building Club in Vernon Hall, arrangements were made for their entertainment and dance in Paine Memorial on Thursday night, October 15.

After the business meeting addresses were delivered on Davitt and his work in behalf of Ireland.

Dr. J. F. Sullivan, who compared the work and character of Davitt with some men of the present day, made the principal address.

MAY INDICT MRS. 'JACK' IN ART CASE

CHICAGO, Sept. 22.—According to usage, the Department of Justice has refused to let Attorney Sims have any final disposition the $80,000 art treasure cases against Mrs. Jack Rockwell Crane (Shelbourne of Lake Forest, daughter of the millionaire family of Cranes, and Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, wealthy widow, leader of exclusive society in Boston and renowned collector of old-world art treasures and curios.

The cases probably will be taken before the next Federal Grand Jury, which meets early in October. Should the Grand Jury find that an attempt was made to defraud the government by the evasion of customs duties, indictments against the two women will follow.

"I have received instructions from the Department of Justice to look into these cases," said District Attorney Sims. "Even if I had not received these instructions I should have taken them up at all events."

WRIGHT WINS WORLD'S RECORD FOR AIR FLIGHT

10,000 CHEER AMERICAN AS HE FLIES AEROPLANE 61 MILES IN 92 MINUTES.

LE MANS, Sept. 22.—In the presence of the officials of the French Aero Club of Sarthe, General Bassine-Hayter, commander of the Fourth Army Corps, the American ambassador, Henry White; a large number of French and foreign officers and aeroplane experts and a cheering crowd of 10,000, Wilbur Wright, the American aeronaut, captured the world's record from his brother, Orville Wright, with a flight in his machine of one hour, thirty-one minutes and fifty-one seconds, covering ninety-eight kilometers, or nearly sixty-one miles.

During the recent accident at Fort Myer, the trial for the Michelin cup, for the greatest distance covered by an aeroplane in 1908, and the Aero Club prize of $1,000 for the longest flight over an enclosed ground, attracted intense interest, although the spectators displayed the utmost sympathy.

Wright Flies Near Ground.

Wright at first manifested extraordinary prudence, flying so low that he seemed almost to touch the earth, but as the thirteen round he rose to sixty feet.

At the end of the thirty-third round Wright shut off his motor and came lightly to the ground in front of the derrick.

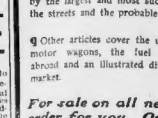
With a mad rush the crowd broke through the lines and rushed forward, only being prevented from lifting the American in triumph on their shoulders by charging cavalry.

Among the first to reach Mr. Wright's side was Henry White, the American ambassador, who told the smiling aeronaut of how keen pleasure he felt in witnessing his victory. The ambassador added that he was expressing the sentiments of President Roosevelt and the whole American people in congratulating him. Other friends were equally enthusiastic.

Subsequently, Ambassador White said he believed the American people should present a testimonial to the Wright brothers.

"If Germany honors Zeppelin," he asked, "why should not America honor the men who have opened a new page in the history of the world?"

As the measurement, under the rules, is only taken from the flags, the official distance of the flight is given as 96.60 kilometres. Under the conditions of the contest for the Michelin cup Wright will set a record of 53 minutes, covering 98.6 kilometres.



Does It Pay to use Motor Trucks?

¶ If you are using or contemplate using any type of automobile for business purposes you should read the September issue of MoToR, the National Magazine of Motoring—

A Business Wagon Number—

in which the commercial application of the automobile is treated exhaustively and conservatively. Cold, unadorned facts regarding the cost of operation and the advantages and limitations of the various types under all sorts of conditions and in all kinds of business are put before the reader by writers not only competent but disinterested.

¶ A leading article deals with the necessary readjustment of delivery services in order to secure the greatest economy in the operation of motor wagons—a point of vital importance; another with the selection of a motor wagon, carrying out the features necessary for success in various lines of work; another with the use of light vehicles by traveling salesmen, real estate dealers, contractors and others.

¶ The taxicab is made the subject of a comprehensive article covering the operation of public motor cab services, the systems of management in use by the largest and most successful companies, the number of cabs now on the streets and the probable growth of the business.

¶ Other articles cover the use of motors in agricultural work, tires for motor wagons, the fuel problem, motor business wagon development abroad and an illustrated directory of all motor wagons on the American market.

At last the Cleveland team has landed at the top of the heap in that sizzling American League race, and from the way they are bowling down every team which comes along from the East they intend to hold the highest niche for some time.

No team in the league deserves the place more than the present holders, who have fought desperately, surmounting all obstacles in the way of discouraging injuries to star players, and are now in a position where they will show the baseball world that they are eligible to be called prospective champions.

If Cleveland can hold their first place till the end it will prove that a team reputed to be made up of individual stars and lacking the collective playing qualities of some others is all a myth, and after all there is some inherent strength which was not observable to some of the prejudiced ones who could only see Detroit and St. Louis.

Depends Upon Red Sox.

But Cleveland's place is like a quicksand so long as the Tigers, with the White Sox and the Browns, are grouped within striking distance, and a loss by one and a win by the other will reverse their positions, and Cleveland's chances depend greatly on the ability of the Red Sox to check the Tiger while the Naps make progress with the other Eastern clubs.

As Chicago and St. Louis also won their games yesterday, they gained on the Tigers, and the former team is so close that a win to-day and a downfall for the Tigers will put the White Sox in second place.

The Red Sox was the only Eastern club to beat the Westerners yesterday, but it was about time the worm turned after three straight defeats by the Naps.

Giants Pulled Down.

The Giants were pulled down a peg by getting a jolt from the Pirates in their last game of the season and are only two and a half games away from the Chicago Cubs, who made a leap upward by winning a doubleheader from the Phillies.

The series begins to-day on the Polo Grounds, when the Pirates and the Giants battle in the greatest series of the year for the Gotham fans.

If the Cubs take Ge count and the Pirates beat Brooklyn, then the two teams will be tied for second and complicate matters all the more for the honor of the runner-up prize.

SO. BOSTON BOY GETS VERDICT

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 22.—Because his seconds rushed into the ring to claim a foul, Bartley Connolly of this city lost the decision in the fifth round of his scheduled six-round bout with Larry Conley of South Boston at Pavilion Athletic Club. It was the climax of a rough-house exhibition.

In the fifth Larry twice gave Bartley the leg, once pushing the Portland man over the ropes so that he was helped back into the ring in a dazed condition.

HARVARD FOOTBALL SQUAD, LED BY CAPTAIN BURR, LEAVING LOCKER BUILDING FOR PRACTICE

O'BRIEN TO MEET LANGFORD

After much haggling over weight on the part of Jack O'Brien, he has agreed to meet Sam Langford in the ring at 163 pounds ringside with clean breaks inserted in the rules agreement.

O'Brien wanted the weight to be 165 pounds ringside, but Joe Woodman, Langford's manager, refused to concede this, as he says Langford never weighs over 160 pounds.

Said Woodman, "I don't see why Sam should concede anything to O'Brien, who is being favored by meeting such a good card as Langford, who was never accused of faking, and if anything O'Brien should be the one to accept any terms we might want to make.

"I would like to match Langford against O'Brien, winner take all, at the regular middleweight limit of 158 pounds three hours before the bout, with straight Queensberry rules governing the contest, at any distance.

"I think that O'Brien is simply stalling on the weight matter, as I am sure he cannot make the middleweight limit.

The match was clinched yesterday in the office of the New York Journal, when O'Brien and his manager, Harry Pollak, met by appointment and conversed with Manager Woodman over the telephone over the leased wire in the BOSTON AMERICAN office.

There will be another meeting on Friday to consider the club to handle the card and select the referee.

HARVARD SQUAD IS REDUCED BY HAUGHTON

Coach Haughton of the Harvard football eleven is already trimming his big squad. He picked thirty out of the sixty-five candidates and gave them a long talk and drilled them in the signals.

Assisting Haughton were Daly, Knowlton, Kerchey, Harley, Parker, Motley, Saches and Guild. The latter had charge of the second squad. The men were divided yesterday into first and second squads. All the most likely candidates for the varsity are on the first squad, but there will doubtless be shifting from time to time as different men on the second team make good.

The first two teams were made up from the varsity squad. The second on both the teams were used interchangeably.

The teams were composed as follows:

HYLAND AND GOODMAN IN 12-ROUND MIX-UP TO-NIGHT

When two roaring-in, never-stop-going boxers of the Kid Goodman and Fighting Dick Hyland type get loose in the ring there is always a lively time on the card and one of the attraction billed to-night for the Armory A. A. members when they gather in the clubhouse to watch those sterling performers go after the decision in their twelve-round mix-up.

Hyland, the coast boy, is a classy knight of the ring so far as his record goes and like most with the Western style, believes in winning by hurricane tactics which is prevalent in the territory he comes from. He made good in New York, where they demand plenty of action, and is sure to make a fit before the Hub critics.

Those who have seen Goodman say he has all the earmarks of mailing and arrangements have been made to get accurate news of the political battles.

pothook but depend on landing the most number of wallops.

The Kid has been forced to meet the toughest in the ring, but never flinched, and whenever the decision went against him gave the onlookers a run for their money so that they never complained, and he is one of the few who exacted sympathy whenever the award went against him.

The opening bout of eight rounds between Tommy Rawson of East Boston, and Eddie Carr of South Boston is sure to prove one of the fastest contests ever seen at the club.

Then will follow a ten-round bout between Willie Reilly of South Boston and Kid Manning of Fairvieker, a match that has caused great rivalry between the adherents of the men, and is sure to result in one grand contest.

There will be announced at this show the result of the primaries, as special

MOTORISTS SAY RUN WILL BE THE HARDEST OF TESTS

By J. C. KERRISON.

Many of the contestants in the twenty-four-hour endurance run of the Bay State Automobile Association have now gotten a fair idea of what they are to encounter on the run which starts from Boston, if possible, the staying abilities of one car over another. On Saturday night and all day Sunday the cars of the Buick Company went over the route, and the drivers assembled for themselves the fact that the committee had selected a difficult battle ground. Harry W. and A. A. Knight, the former who will drive Pierce car No. 1 and the latter who will spread the confetti in the run, made the trip well within schedule time, and Lee Bible, nominator of a car, piloted his entry over the route, as also Buick Company had two cars, a runabout and a touring. On Friday and Saturday parts of the Studebaker and Cook of the Cadillac both went out in search of the good things to be encountered on the long ride.

All of the searchers for information discovered what they desired, and are now feeling that they have the run in a going to be. It looked like a "cinch" at the start, but the long, hilly development, namely personal observation, placed a different complexion on the run, and all now unite in saying that the test will exceed in matters of strenuousness all previous tours in either this or any other section of the country. The Glidden tour was a pleasure trip say they in comparison with this test, and the car that goes through with a clean score will have done what has performed a feat worthy of consideration. Still, the impression prevails that there will be a few clean score cars at the end of the run, and that a run over will be necessary to determine the ownership of the two cups offered by the club and the special trophy offered by the club member.

Harry Fosdick, who has entered two Lancia cars, will arrive in Boston to-morrow morning, and will bring with him Duncan Curry of the New York American and Russell L. Field of the Brooklyn Eagle, who consider this tour of sufficient importance to cover individually.

The meeting of observers and contestants to be held to-morrow evening just prior to the run should prove decidedly important, as all rules will then be considered and final instructions given by the committee to the participants.

The new quarters of the Bay State Automobile Association in the Hotel Curtis will be formally opened this evening, for which event a reception and dance has been extensive arrangements. The quarters are considered by the club ideally located and adapted to the uses of a motoring organization as any in the country, and are not excelled even by the famous home of the A. C. A. in New York city. Cer-

NELSON NETS $125,000 IN BOXING GAME

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22.—Champion Battling Nelson is writing a book which will give a record of his life, mainly since he has been in the limelight of the prize ring.

The book will be full of straight facts only, according to Nelson, and its most interesting feature is sporting news. It will be the figures that the Dane gives in regard to his profits from professional pugilism. He has fared it with our cereals and declares that in five years he has made $125,000 from his various fights and the bets he has made on himself. In addition he has settered $50,000 from theatrical ventures. He is now the greatest drawing card among pugilists and commands $1,250 per week besides a percentage of the profits.

BILLY DELANEY BRINGS KAUFMAN AND ATTELL EAST

BY TAD.

Billy Delaney is coming East with Al Kaufman and Abe Attell. Bill writes that Al has beaten everything in the heavyweight division out in California and wants to come East to grab off a few.

"He cleaned up Battling Johnson and Jim Flynn in masterly fashion," writes Billy, "and if you have anything there of his weight just say that I want them for Al. This boy was slow at starting, like Jeffries, but once the barrier goes up he's there like an eel. You know I told you two years ago that Jeffries was just learning how to fight when he retired. I am glad that all the sporting writers agree with me now.

"I said that Al was a champion two years ago. He lost to Jack O'Brien, but to I believed in him after that and he is coming faster than I ever dreamed of. Just let the white fellows know that we are coming and tell that Jack Johnson can beat Al and will not send him against him, but any white man will do. After we beat them it is time enough to fight Johnson.

* * *

Fred Bradley was up last night, and says that if Kid McCoy wants to start in a soft one why not take him. Fred says he will be tickled to death if the Kid hooks up with him.

Sidney De Forrest, manager of Jim Stewart, phoned us and said that he would promote McCoy a nerry time if he would fight Jim.

They're after you, Kid.

* * *

We still maintain that the picture printed by the imitation evening paper of the last Gans-Nelson fight was a fake. A prominent sporting man has left $500 with us to bet at odds of 3 to 1 that it was a fake and will prove it.

Money talks, not idle words.

YALE TO HAVE PRO COACH

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Sept. 22.—Indications are Yale will return to professional coaching in baseball. Captain Fred Murphy is here and will confer with prominent alumni for developing a system of coaching.

Yale has system in other sports, but lacks it in baseball, the sport in which it is the weakest. Captain "Ted" Jones of the nine last Spring has decided to return to Yale for the entire coming year and will be available for coaching in baseball and football.

Yale will make radical innovations in rowing. The new English shell has been ordered, to arrive in time for Fall work. The rowing begins as soon as the Fall term opens. Coach John Kennedy has returned after a Summer trip to England.

He was a passenger on the steamer that left Boston bound. Wray, the Harvard coach, made a similar trip. As a result of his trip, he will make modifications in the Fall stroke. Yale has four veterans returning, while Harvard has seven.

LANKY BOB BACK IN RING

BENSON MINES, N. Y., Sept. 22.—Bob Fitzsimmons, former champion of the world, went three rounds with Jim Paul, the fighting lumberjack. Fitz contented his man easily, and now and then would work his famous shift to get in a harpoon jab.

Following the go with Paul, Fitz met Ralp Barner, a 220-pound former sparring partner of Jeffries and McCoy, in a sparring match.

WASHER A STAR FIELDER.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 22.—Rock Washer, former Homestead pitcher and left fielder, now of Ottumwa, Ia., of the Central Association, made ten putouts in left in a twenty-inning game with Jacksonville, Ill. Washer was given a trial by the Phillies about three years ago, but failed to make good as a twirler. After being released by the Phillies he tried the outfield with success. He has a brother here in Philadelphia who gave up trying to play ball years ago after trying to catch a ball on the top of his head.

BAN JOHNSON PICKS NAPS

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 22.—Ban Johnson left for Chicago last night. Before leaving he said: "I watched the Cleveland club in the series against Chicago, and I must say that Lajoie and his players are playing the best and strongest game they have put up this season. They are playing better than any team in the league, and it would not be at all surprising should they pass Detroit before the next two weeks are over, as the Detroit club is badly crippled team at present, with the infield shattered."

BEST MAINE BROOD MARE.

When Bob Nelson won the opening heat of the 2:20 class in 2:18¾, at Lewiston, he gave his dam, Josie, her third 2:20 performer, a distinction enjoyed by no other Maine broodmare, her produce being Joe R. Nelson, 2:13½; Bob Nelson, 2:18¾, and Emma Worland, 2:19¾.

MINISTER WHO DRANK DEPOSED

PITTSBURG, Sept. 22.—Rev. D. C. Hinton, pastoral rector of St. Mary's Memorial Chapel, of which Right Rev. Cortland Whitehead, Bishop of this diocese, is the head, has been deposed from his position and will, it is said, leave the Episcopal Church and enter missionary work.

During the absence of Bishop Whitehead in Europe Hinton was arrested for being drunk and disorderly in the basement of a well-known down-town cafe

JACK BONNER WHIPPED.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 22.—Jim Stewart of New York, a young and coming youngster, gave the veteran Jack Bonner a terrible lacing in a six-round affair at the West Philadelphia A. C. and was no match for the New York giant, and when the good-natured boy was on the floor taking the count of nine.

HISGEN CALLS UPON BRYAN TO OUST HASKELL

Or "Go to Oblivion the Worst-Hated Man Who Ever Ran for Presidency."

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 22.—Thomas L. Hisgen, Independence party candidate for President, in an impassioned speech to an audience that filled the large Athenaeum here called on Mr. Bryan to repudiate Charles N. Haskell, platform-maker and money-getter of the Democratic party, or stand confessed a double-dealer with the people. The address of Mr. Hisgen was the most spirited he has made since he began the campaign.

The first speaker of the evening was former Congressman M. W. Howard of Alabama, who has joined the Hisgen platform forces. Because of the long jump in the ocean-to-ocean campaign of the Oil Trust fighter it was necessary for Mr. Howard to catch a late train to-night for Houston.

Mr. Hisgen and his party, consisting of George C. Hisgen and Clement L. Pollock, leave at 6:30 in the morning for the Texas city with the hope of reaching there in time to take up the speaking when Congressman Howard gets through.

In the course of his speech Mr. Hisgen said:

"You Democrats of the South cannot possibly go into the Republican party.

"Are you going to vote for the present high priest of the Democratic party? Do you believe that Bryan is still the unselfish patriot and tribune of the people he was when he fought and lost twice before, or do you believe that he has sacrificed his fidelity to the people for the sake of presiding at the White House in Washington —sacrificed himself and the people and sold out to the political tricksters in the pivotal States?

Bryan's Sudden Change.

"Bryan wants to carry New York, and he is hand and glove with Murphy and McCarren, politicians whose political methods have appalled the world. Bryan wants to carry Indiana, and he allowed Tom Taggart, the gambler of French Lick Springs, to name his personal lawyer as Bryan's running mate on the national ticket. Bryan wants to carry Illinois, and he now consorts with Roger Sullivan, whom he formerly denounced with all the wealth of his picturesque vocabulary.

"Bryan wanted the contributions of the trusts, and particularly of the Standard Oil Company, and he put Governor Haskell of Oklahoma into the campaign as money-getter. Haskell is the hater of union labor, and it has been shown by the revelations of Mr. Hearst that he is one of the minions of the Standard Oil Company. How can you support the Democratic party, led by Bryan, who has deserted the people for the hope of the office. There is no asylum for the Lincoln Republican and the Jefferson Democrat except the Independence party.

Treasonable Conduct.

"The Republicans see the handwriting on the wall, and as a result they have fired Foraker, the Standard Oil hireling, out of the party. They know that through William Randolph Hearst the people have been aroused, and that they will no longer brook such treasonable conduct on the part of their public officials.

"Haskell is in the same boat as Foraker and Bailey and Sibley, and unless Mr. Bryan reads the signs of the times as cleverly as the Republican leaders have done he will go down to oblivion the worst hated man who ever ran for the presidency.'

STORK BEATS OUT TELEGRAM

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—A novel suit has been begun by the filing in the county clerk's office of the complaint in an action brought by Mrs. Olga Eisenberg against the Postal Telegraph Cable Company to recover $10,000 damages for alleged negligence of the company in not delivering a telegram sent by her husband, Aaron Eisenberg, to the family doctor telling him to come at once as the stork was expected.

Mrs. Eisenberg says that at 1:15 on the afternoon of May 10, 1905, her husband, acting for her, sent a telegram from the defendant's office at 157 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, telling him to come at once.

"The defendant failed to deliver it in reasonable time," says the complainant, "and about 9 p. m., said day, she gave birth to a child without medical attendance."

SEEK FIREBUG AT ORLEANS

ORLEANS, Sept. 22.—The town authorities, led by Selectman Crosby, are to-day making an investigation of a fire, believed to have been set, which last night caused $300 damage to the Town Hall and threatened for a time to wipe out all the buildings in that section of the town. Driven by a high wind, the fire got a good start before being discovered. A hand bucket brigade and the firemen, manning the town's chemical engine, had a long fight before getting the flames under control. Selectman Crosby is confident the fire was set, and says he has a clew. The fire is the fourth in the town within a short time. The authorities believe a firebug is at work.

TAKES 6-STORY LEAP TO DEATH

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Distracted by the illusion that she and her husband were soon to be evicted by their landlord, Mrs. Mary Conners, forty-four years old, threw herself from the roof of the six-story house in which the childless couple lived at No. 923 Brook avenue. Conners is a carpenter and work has been slack for some time. His wife got the idea they could not raise the rent next month. She had been acting queerly, the neighbors say, for several days.

PLANTS SEE, FEEL AND REMEMBER

Do You Laugh at That? Why?

Copyright, 1908, by American-Journal-Examiner

Francis Darwin, son of the great man who wrote "The Origin of Species" and lifted the minds of millions from childish guessing to serious thought and study, offers to the world a theory backed by facts as interesting as the teachings of his father.

The younger Darwin declares that the plants, trees, flowers, bushes, herbs and weeds have actually a memory, and can develop habits as animals develop them.

Following the statement by Mr. Darwin comes the statement of Professor Wager that plants have an organism like that of the brain in animals, and that they have eyes with which they can see, and see well.

These statements have been treated humorously by many, more given to laughter than to thought, according to our American fashion.

What is there humorous in such statements? Are there not great dignity and beauty of the fig tree? Have you in Winter time seen a group of green pines standing alone on a hill, the lower branches heavy with snow, the top branches bare, bending and whispering in the cold Winter wind? If you stand among those trees and look up, listening to their rustling talk, can you help feeling that they are individuals, expressing with dignity life and beauty and truth?

Is there not in one of those gigantic western trees, standing for thousands of years pointing to all parts of the Universe, with the earth's slow motion, a dignity, a PERSONALITY, equal to that of some little ranting human being spouting and capering for a moment and disappearing?

They say that it would be dreadful and cruel to think of the plants being able to see and to understand, however dimly. You cannot perhaps conceive it possible for an American beauty rose to stand erect, happy in its pride and strength, and see the weed pulled up, dying at its feet.

Why not? Doesn't the American beauty millionaire stand erect, happy and proud, and, without any especial sorrow or trouble, watch the dying human weeds at his feet?

You feel sorry, perhaps, for the waving grain that sees the mower slowly come, cutting off the field.

But what about us; what about humanity? Are we not a standing field of grain with the mowing machine going back and forth among us always? Doesn't every one of us see ahead the day when he will be cut down? Are not the children and the poor destroyed untimely, uselessly, pulled up and scattered? We stand that WELL.

Men, not plants, were referred to in the words, "Which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not."

We humans feel sure that the sight of the plants, if they have ANY sight, must be very dim and feeble. We think that their understanding must be very limited, practically worthless.

We would say in our comic human pride, "Why, the plants do not even know that we human beings exist. They do not appreciate US.

"What does their understanding amount to?"

Well, what does our HUMAN understanding or our HUMAN sight amount to? Do we see the great and wonderful truths in this wonderful Universe? Are our eyes open to the actual beauty of the infinite worlds, the infinite space and power in which we are a tiny part?

Would one of the really great spirits in the Universe, one with sight and mind grasping the whole, see such a great difference between one of us and a little piece of dust-covered pigweed by the roadside?

In every living organism there is thought, sight and feeling, the struggling toward the light and toward the truth. And we vain little creatures, little human fungus on this little insignificant earth, vain of our understanding, confident that our sight is the REAL sight, we are only wretched, little human infusoria, little primitive beginnings, poor little collections of fat, meat, blood, bone, muscle, hair, teeth, nails and conceit.

One of the really great spirits of the Universe would be as amazed to hear that WE talk and think as we are to hear of the plants being able to see, hear and remember.

The Poverty of Unbelief

No Life Is More Empty Than His Who Lacks Faith in an Existence Beyond the Grave

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

©Copyright, 1908, by American-Journal-Examiner

If you are on the sunny side of middle age and have no religious belief, let me beg of you to turn your mind to serious study of the subject of life after death.

It has been my sorrowful experience the last few years to be often thrown with two old people who have reached more than three-score years and ten without any faith in future existence.

Both have a tenacious hold on this life, and both have been people of marked intellectual power. Both are enjoying all that money, tender care and a good reputation can bestow of happiness and both are as utterly miserable beings as can well be described.

One is a woman, and her failing mind turns constantly and regretfully to departed times and people. She bemoans the loss of her youthful powers and charms, and speaks of dead friends as forever gone.

At any reference to a future life she shakes her head, and the unbelief she prided herself upon in her prime, as an evidence of a superior brain, becomes pathetic and ghastly in the cold, lonely rays of the failing light of old age.

Old Age to Be Pitied

Her reasoning faculties are impaired, her memory unreliable, and it is too late for her to apply herself to the investigations which would prove the great truth of immortality. And without any definite idea of a life beyond the grave, she sits through restless days and waits for death as relief from the monotony of old age.

The man, who is younger in years but possessed of less physical vigor than the woman, dwells upon his past usefulness, and grows bitter and rebellious at his present condition. He is unimportant in the march of progress to-day; his body and mind can no more cope with business or study.

He knows there is nothing ahead of him in this world but increasing age and feebleness, and he murmurs over and over:

"If only one could know there was something better beyond—but no, no, it is only the grave that waits."

Rocks of Unbelief

In the woman's early youth she fell in with atheists possessed of a certain superficial wit and brilliancy of brain. They were more amusing companions than the old-fashioned, orthodox people of her acquaintance, and the girl imbibed their ideas and enjoyed the amusement and horror her skepticism aroused in conventional circles.

She was too intelligent to accept the old hell-fire doctrine of foreordination, and there came no wise soul into her radius to teach her the happy, wholesome truths of a loving religion, and so she settled into the rut of unbelief.

The man had been reared in the awful Calvinistic doctrine, and when his mind began to develop his intellect abandoned its horrors as inconsistent with even the benign habits of Nature. Then he investigated the manifestations of spiritualism just enough to learn the dark, unwholesome and contradictory side of it, and fell back upon the materialistic rock, and lies there to-day, a lonely, desolate soul, with the waters of the Arctic sea of old Age beating about him.

Oh, the pity of it!

Seek for Living Truth

If youth and middle life you may find a fictitious contentment in your materialism and unbelief. But let me beg of you to leave no stone unturned in your search for the living truth before you reach old age.

There is a life beyond this life. There is a world, and a succession of worlds, where our souls pass through other phases of existence. There is a reunion with our spiritual kin, and there are wonderful things to see and hear and know after we go from this one sphere of many spheres.

If you put yourself in a receptive state of mind, and desire to receive knowledge and evidences of these truths, they will come to you from all sources. If you keep yourself in an aggressive and doubtful frame of mind, and close your heart and spirit to any proofs of immortality, you can go on to the desolate shores of agnosticism, an unbeliever.

But if you honestly and humbly and earnestly lift your whole being to the invisible forces about you, and ask for light and knowledge, they will be given.

Begin each day with such a request. Pray for light and wisdom as you walk the street to your daily duties, and as surely as the days pass so surely shall your souls request be granted. You will meet the people and read the books and encounter the experiences necessary to the enlightenment of your mind once this desire becomes positive and unremitting.

Take an hour alone each day and lift your soul to the silence and the mists of doubt will vanish.

They have not searched for spiritual intellectuality.

They have gone through life with egotism and self-conceit blinding the spiritual vision. Open your eyes, your heart, your soul, your mind. Be reverent, be silent, be receptive.

Realize that you are seeking the most important knowledge that a human being can possess. If death waits you to-morrow, such knowledge can only be a blessing and a comfort. If you live to sit on the shores of time by the desolate sea of age, this knowledge and this faith alone can bestow happiness.

Past glory, fame, beauty and usefulness, with all that money can bestow of physical comforts, do not render old age happy or enlightened.

Faith in God and belief in a continuation of life beyond the grave alone can do that.

Seek, then, for such faith—if you do not possess it.

Seek, and you shall find.

Do Not Be Blinded

It does not matter what some man of great intellectual power may tell you of the folly of faith and of the scientific proofs of materialism.

Such men have developed the intellect only on one side.

They have not searched for spiritual intellectuality.

They have gone through life with egotism and self-conceit blinding the spiritual vision. Open your eyes, your heart, your soul, your mind. Be reverent, be silent, be receptive.

Realize that you are seeking the most important knowledge that a human being can possess. If death waits you to-morrow, such knowledge can only be a blessing and a comfort. If you live to sit on the shores of time by the desolate sea of age, this knowledge and this faith alone can bestow happiness.

Past glory, fame, beauty and usefulness, with all that money can bestow of physical comforts, do not render old age happy or enlightened.

Faith in God and belief in a continuation of life beyond the grave alone can do that.

Seek, then, for such faith—if you do not possess it.

Seek, and you shall find.

The Ideal Society

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

(Mrs. Astor says that in our exclusive society politicians, Senators, authors and millionaires should all meet on terms of equality.)

HO! for the days when our swagger society
No more shall be cursed by exclusion,
When men with the goods, of all sorts and variety,
Shall mingle in gladsome profusion;
When Bailey, of Texas, shall lead the cotillon—
A real Senatorial winner—
And Gates, looking on, bets a couple of million
That Archbold sits next him at dinner.

If Senators, Wardmen and great politicians
With Captains of Money could dine,
And list to alluring, polite propositions
While nibbling at walnuts and wine;
If offers were made, very prudent and tentative,
While the lights cast a glow through the hall,
From a Standard Oil man to a suave Representative:
Why need to write letters at all?

If Murphy might meet, 'mid the rollicking jollity
Of Newport, Tom Ryan or Rogers,
And talk upon terms of sweet social equality
With two such exclusive old codgers;
How easy 'twould be to come straight to the matter
At issue; with skill and precision
To fry out the fat, without leaving a spatter
To gladden a go-between's vision.

Disastrous exposures would not any more occur
If in his own parlor John D.
Should talk it all over with Senator Forsker
While sipping a five o'clock tea.
Mrs. Astor is right; if in modern society
Could be stirred the political pot,
And big deals were pulled off quite without impropriety,
It surely would help a whole lot!

The Local Newspaper

(FROM THE MEDFORD MERCURY)

On another page of the Mercury is reprinted a pointed editorial from the BOSTON AMERICAN entitled "Advertising in Local Newspapers."

While the Mercury does not agree with the attitude of the BOSTON AMERICAN on some public questions or toward some public personages, it welcomes the independence and courage that pervade its columns.

If more newspapers would show the same fearlessness in attacking the rumsity of certain great corporations and in exposing corporate or political wrongdoing that the BOSTON AMERICAN does, instead of being subservient to those interests, it would be better for the community, and the people would be protected in their rights.

The editor of the AMERICAN evidently appreciates the situation when he says: "You cannot keep this country in order. You cannot regulate or keep down its finely organized rascality unless you have in every little town, and, if possible, in every village, the local editor who is a moral policeman, using publicity as his club.

"If you kill off the local editor by neglecting his advertising columns you deprive his locality and the country at large of the most important features of public defence and good government."

Hayes's Famous Stride That Won the Marathon

This Photograph Shows Hayes, Winner of the Greatest Marathon Race, as He Appeared When He Entered the Stadium at the Finish of the Great Race, Which Gave Victory to America in the London Olympic Contest

Famous Marathon Runner to Teach Boston Boys How to Run in Order to Make Long Distances Without Extreme Fatigue

How many Boston schoolboys wish to attend the Boston American Marathon School, with John J. Hayes as their instructor?

All of you?

Well, boys, be ready on Saturday morning of this week promptly on the hour of 11 to start in front of the B. A. A. in Exeter street. Bring your running togs with you.

None but schoolboys will be allowed to take part, and none may enter save those boys who appear with running suits.

John J. Hayes, the famous New York boy who won the plaudits of the athletic world a few short weeks ago by winning the great twenty-six-mile Marathon at London, and who now places his knowledge of the game at the disposal of the boys of Boston, is thoroughly interested in the BOSTON AMERICAN'S idea.

"It's a splendid idea of the AMERICAN," he said to-day when he visited the office, "and I'm sure that I shall be delighted with my pupils. I hope every boy in Boston who runs, or who wishes to be a runner, will be on hand. I have not forgotten that the best of my early experiences at the Marathon were obtained over the Marathon course that begins out Ashland way and winds up at the B. A. A.

"This time we'll start at the B. A. A., and, of course, we shall notiter the boys out. It would be utter nonsense to think of leading a company of schoolboys over a twenty-six-mile course. I haven't any such intention. Better call it a 'Marathonette.'

"To every boy who takes part I shall present a souvenir of the 'Hayes Marathon School.' To-morrow I am going to have something to say through the BOSTON AMERICAN in the nature of a series on 'How to Run. I shall also announce definitely the other necessary information."

To those who think of the athlete as necessarily a big bruiser of a fellow, the appearance of quiet and gentlemanly "Jack" Hayes, the department store clerk who won a Marathon and came home to find himself suddenly elevated to a position at the head of a big sporting goods department—which he left for a season on the Keith circuit—comes with something like a shock.

John J. Hayes, winner of the great Marathon of 1908, is nineteen years old, stands but five feet four inches tall and weighs about 125 pounds. He is quite as Irish as you find them, with black hair, blue eyes, a good-humored face and a ton of confidence in himself. With all his triumphs on the cinder path—and he has won enough cups and medals and trophies to fill a cupboard—he is a modest chap who doesn't care to gabble about his own achievements.

"Before the fun starts on Saturday," Hayes says, "I shall talk to my boys for about ten minutes, giving them advice about diet as well as about methods of running. Then I shall run with them, giving them advice as we go."

CONRY CLAIMS FRAUD; FIGHT FOR A RECOUNT

Former Congressman Joseph A. Conry late this afternoon prepared papers asking the Board of Election Commissioners to recount the votes in Wards 7 and 9 and Precincts 6 and 7 of Ward 12. While Mr. Conry himself declared that he asked a recount because he thought the figures on the face of the returns were questionable his lieutenants went further and declared that there had been barefaced frauds in the South End caucuses.

Conry's lieutenants talked openly and boldly about robbery and jobbery.

Petitions for the recount are under way. Fifty petitioners will be necessary in each of the three questioned wards.

"That Mr. Conry was robbed in yesterday's primaries in the South End," it was said for the East Boston ex-congressman by Joseph A. Kane at Conry headquarters in State street, "is proven to our satisfaction, in the light of history, by a mere perusal of the returns.

"Anybody who knows Ward 7 and Ward 9 and the Doyle precincts of Ward 12 knows that any old canvassing, running against the 'machine' in those districts is bound to make a good showing. And yet they give Mr. Conry only 278 votes in Ward 7, only 290 votes in all of Ward 9 (against 1500 for Keliher) and but 86 votes in the Doyle precincts of Ward 12.

"In our opinion, the South End machine has overreached, which will appear when we can get the ballots out into the light and look them over.

"The fact is that Mr. Conry's representatives in the district under suspicion laid down on him on the night before the primaries, and he was practically without representation in all these precincts. We are satisfied that Mr. Conry is the legitimate nominee in the Ninth District, that he will carry Winthrop to-night and that the recount will show everything that we claim."

Ward 7 is the John Quinn ward in the heart of the city. Ward 9 is the "Jim" Donovan-Keliher ward in the very center of the South End. The Ward 12 precincts are the domain of "Jim" Doyle.

The 350 odd Democrats in the town of Winthrop, which belongs in the Ninth District along with Wards 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8 and 9 and Precincts 6 and 7 of Ward 12, hold their caucus to-night.

Unless the recount wanted by Conry brings material changes in the city vote, however, the Winthrop caucus is of minor importance.

O'Connell Satisfied.

Senator Frank J. Linehan, who wanted Congressman "Joe" O'Connell's scalp, and whom the Dorchester Congressman defeated even in the Linehan ward (13), and their Linehan precinct in South Boston, had not got around to making any statement to-day. His followers were missing from their accustomed haunts.

Former State Senator "Tom" Curley, whose Jefferson Club was put out of business in the 17th by Alderman "Jim" Curley's Tammanyites, was also lying low.

John F. Fitzgerald stands by his statement that the victory of the Honorable Keliher-Doyle people over the Fitzgerald-Lomasney-McNary folk has no significance as bearing on the municipal election of next year.

Dixon a Victor.

Senator Edward W. Dixon defeated John Quinn, Jr., for the Democratic senatorial nomination in the Third District, while ex-Superintendent of Streets James H. Doyle received an unmentioned nomination for the Senate in the Fourth District, in South Boston. Patrick H. O'Connor won the senatorial nomination in a field of six candidates. In Ward 6 the Fitzgerald forces succeeded in defeating Representative Grady and Dr. Santosuosso for the House.

Boston Republicans had but few live contests. James A. Campbell won the nomination for Congress easily from William Myrick, while Daniel W. Lane in the Eleventh District had but as easy a time in defeating Charles H. Seiler.

Ex-Congressman Harrison H. Atwood of Dorchester won a nomination for the House from S. H. Mildram on a platform criticising Mayor Hibbard.

POLO GROUNDS, NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—With their lead cut down to six points as the result of yesterday's dual slaughter, the Giants faced the Cubs again this afternoon and for a deciding contest. The chance by winning can increase their small lead to one of quite nifty, if not decisive, proportions, while if they lose, the Cubs can gain the leadership by a point. Consequently to-day's game took on all the importance of one of the most exciting and sensational struggles of the season.

There was an awful damper put on the hopes of local fans yesterday, but they were back in form this afternoon to root just as hard as ever for their favorite Giants and to show their loyalty.

It cannot be said, however, that New York crowds are so entirely a unit in favor of their own teams, as are the baseball crowds of the West. Out in the wild and woolly there are no waverers; they are unanimously for the home team whether there are one or two clubs in their city. This may be explained in a way by New York having more cosmopolitan crowds, more transient spectators, but there is no doubt at all of Western fans as a body being the most loyal.

There was the usual doubt before the game as to what pitcher would be selected for the Giants' box work, and for that matter Manager Chance was undecided up to the last minute.

There was a falling off from yesterday's record-breaking attendance, still the seating capacity of the grounds, which since the recent addition is about 23,000, was taxed.

AMERICAN LEAGUE BASEBALL GROUNDS, Detroit, Sept. 24.—The laugh was certainly on the Tigers when they took the field against the Red Sox this afternoon. It was the last game of the season between the two clubs and the last chance for the Tigers to redeem themselves.

If Detroit loses the pennant this year the blame can be laid to the doors of Boston. They two defeats came just at the wrong time. The men under Jennings expected a clean-up, but thus far they haven't had a look in. The Red Sox have outfielded all year that Detroit was the luckiest club on the face of the earth, and they have always been of the opinion that with an even break of fortune they could put it all over the American League champions.

DECISION IN DOUGLAS CASE CUTS WAGES

BROCKTON, Sept. 23.—Every shoe worker in Brockton is anxious to hear the details of the decision in the W. L. Douglas Shoe Company case handed down to-day by the State Board of Arbitration. Shoe workers say that it means a sweeping reduction wage for from 1,200 to 1,500 persons. The case relates to a new method of a $3.50 shoe and the matter has been under consideration since January.

The exact percentage of the reduction is not made public. The Executive Board of the Shoeworkers' Union meets to-night to consider the State Board's decision and compare prices which must prevail under it with present lines prices. The union workers protested when the Douglas Company manufactured several styles of $3.50 shoes into $2.50 and $2 factories. The company offered reduced prices to operatives on the ground that lower class work would be acceptable.

The State Board decides to-day that the company had the right to make the transfer under the contract with the union. General President John F. Tobin had ordered the unions to apply for new prices, claiming that the concern's attitude in the matter was destructive to the fundamental principle of trade unionism—that is, the right of collective bargaining.

SOUTH END GROUNDS, Sept. 23.—Two games and then away was the program for the St. Louis Cardinals in their windup sketch in the Hub playing opposite to the Doves in the leading roles.

While double-headers are choice bits of attraction to the bargain chasing fans, the holiday change did not have the magnetic powers some of the other teams possess, and the lateness of the season caused some of the enthusiast to fag, but the weather was quite seasonable, and the benches were filled with the bugs of the diamond.

The Westerners hooked easy for the Doves as they were simply playing the string out with no honors coming to them whichever way luck affected them. With one game in the sack, the Doves bumped themselves a bit to put away a few more as it did not look well to wind up the home dates getting licked by the tailenders.

THE GAME.

FIRST INNING.

Graham got under Shaw's little pop. Charles died to Kelley. Osteen smashed the ball over second for a single. Murray hunted safety. Koney fanned. NO RUNS. Becker went out by the whiff route. Kelley was hit in the shoulder and walked to first. Bates was out on a long fly to Murray. Stem beat out a slow hit to Raymond and Kelley took third on Bug's wild throw to first. Stem stole second. Sweeney beat out a slow hit to Morris, Kelley scoring. Sweeney out stealing. Moran to Morris. ONE RUN.

SECOND INNING.

Graham went out. Charles to Koney. McGann walked. Dahlen singled to left and McCann went to third when Delehanty fumbled. Dahlen going to second on the throw to the infield. Lindaman walked, filling the bases. Becker smashed to centre for a single, scoring McGann and Dahlen. Morris tossed out Kelley. Bates walked, filling the bases again.
